DOROTHY'S DANCE

By HORTENSE CALDWELL

(Copyright, 1919, by the St. Clare Newspaper Syndicate.)

Ever since the death of her father, Dorothy Bliss had kept the lighthouse at Breakers Point with the aid of her small brother, Jerry.

"Oh, sis," he cried, "look what I have here." "What is it?" Dorothy asked, holding out her hand.

"It's an invitation to dance from the boys over at the station, Jerry." "Oh, say, are you going?"

"No, Jerry, I would like to, but I can't go and leave the lamps." "You can have them to me, sis. You know I'd love to light them."

"Well, sis, you ought to be glad you aren't going to the dance," he remarked as they closed the big door.

"Why? Don't you see what kind of a night it is? The waves are about a mile high."

"I tell you what will do, Jerry. You can put on your best suit, and I'll dress up in my evening dress. We'll pretend we are at the dance."

"What's that, Jerry?" "I don't know, go look." Dorothy pulled upon the safety window and looked out. In a glance she took in the situation. A boat was foundering in the water, and that boat was very close to the rocks on which the lighthouse stood.

"Jerry, push on every button to brighten those lamps," she flung back to the excited Jerry as she hurried down the stairs.

"All right," she repeated, "all right." "Yes," said a stranger voice at her elbow, "it's all right now."

HARD TO BEAT THIS RECORD

Hollander Practically Devoted His Life to Worship at Shrine of the Goddess Nicotine.

Mynheer Van Klases, who flourished in Rotterdam, Holland, about fifty years ago, is surely entitled to the title of the "king of smokers."

His funeral was in harmony with his life. By his express directions his coffin was lined with the wood of old cigar boxes.

When our wage-earners and salaried people begin to learn that savings are profits and that the process of accumulating savings is substantially the same as getting profits out of a business, we shall be on the way to becoming a thrifty people.

Their mental process, to the very limited extent that their minds enter into the matter at all, is to regard the pay check as profits, which is, of course, a very fundamental mistake.

In the business of wage-earning the pay check is no more profits than is the cash that comes over the counter of a store or through the receiving teller's window at a bank.

"Give me cheerful people," said the store manager. "I don't mean laughing, jolly, funny people, but people who look on the bright side, who take a cheerful view. As between two men of equal intelligence and experience, but one cheerful, serious bearing and the other cheerful, inclined to smile, I would take the cheerful man every time. He can sell 50 per cent more goods."

"He is just naturally polite because he feels that way; in fact he takes a hopeful, friendly view of everybody and everything. He thinks well of his own stock and shows it freely and displays it attractively because he is interested in it; and because he believes in it himself he quite naturally inspires confidence in the mind of the customer."

Church Made Market Place. Old St. Paul's was a huge building. Its tower and spire rose to a height of 220 feet, and, after the Reformation, its vast nave became the rendezvous of all London that had any business or no business to transact. There was, says one authority, a public thoroughfare through the transepts and across the church. Men tramped through, carrying baskets of meat or bread or coal, bundles, bags, and parcels of all kinds. Hucksters and peddlers not only walked through, but lingered on their way to sell their wares.

Bacon's Rebellion. In 1676, on April 20, Bacon's rebellion began. The colonists of Virginia were being constantly harassed by the hostile Indian bands, who descended on their settlements to plunder and murder. The people asked Governor Berkeley to allow them to form a guard led by Nathaniel Bacon, a young painter, for the defense of their homes. Berkeley refused, calling the request a presumption on the part of the common people.

Besides a son, Mr. Dengler leaves two grandsons, Leo J. and Joseph V. Dengler. The funeral will take place Monday morning, with burial in Holy Sepulcher Cemetery.

Division No. 7, A. O. H., Plan to Celebrate 25th Anniversary.

Division No. 7, Ancient Order of Hibernians, will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of its organization on June 16th with a banquet. Members of the society in Monroe county will be present and leading Hibernians will address the gathering.

This division has nearly three hundred members. It invested $1,000 in the recent Victory Loan, in addition to investments in the previous Liberty loans. Thirty-six members were in war service and three gave their lives.

Mr. J. Homer Hughes and Miss Florence Mahon, pupils of E. M. McCarthy, of 148 Plymouth Avenue South, will give an evening of song at the home of Mrs. P. D. Lewis of 451 East Avenue, on the evening of Saturday, June 7th.

MEDALS FROM KAISER'S STATUE

The big statue of the former Kaiser at Metz has been melted down and made into medals. Three of them, commemorating the Knights of Columbus' distribution of toys to the children of Metz, were presented to Edward L. Hearn, K. of C. Overseas Commissioner, Andrew McSwigan, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Fred Milan of Minneapolis, Minn.

It is expected that other medals made from the same statue and commemorating other Knights of Columbus activities abroad will be sent to K. of C. officials in this country.
