Picturesque Ceremony That Was Held of Great Importance in Old Venetian Days.

Reached His Destination.
The steep stairway called "Break-neck Steps," connecting the upper and lower towns of Quebec, has been the scene, according to old inhabitants, of incidents both tragic and ludicrous. One approaches this stairway (even with its Twentieth century improvements) in "right-flipped" apprehension; writes a recent visitor to the French-Canadian city. But in the old days, at the height of its dangerous career, to reach the bottom without accident was an achievement.

The tale is still being told of the gentleman who tripped on the second step, fell, but slid to safety, bearing on his back a lady, who at his tripping had also tripped and in her plight clutched the gentleman's knotted tippet. At the bottom of the stairway the gentleman politely doffed his hat and said:
"Pardon me, madame, but this is as far as I go."

A picturesque ceremony performed annually in Venice in the time of the doges was the "Marriage of the Adriatic," a rite symbolizing the dominion of the city over the neighboring sea. It was instituted in 1177 to commemorate a great naval victory by the Venetians over Frederick Barbarossa, it is recorded. Pope Alexander III in this year presented a ring to the doge of that day, and ordered his successors, every "Ascension" day, to cast a similar ring into the Adriatic, promising that the bride so espoused should be as dutiful as a wife to her husband. The first ceremony was performed on Ascension day of that year.

The doge and his suite, accompanied by many citizens, proceeded to the island of Lido, in the Adriatic. Arriving there the doge first poured holy water into the sea and then, taking the ring from his finger, dropped it into the ocean, saying: "We espouse thee, a sea, in token of our just and perpetual dominion." Solemn high mass was then celebrated, and the ceremonies concluded with a great feast.
