THE WEATHERCOCK

THE Weathercock on top of a pole on the barn was swinging about as the wind blew it back and forth. "How tiresome you are!" said the Cock. "Mr. Wind, did it ever occur to you to blow your bothersome breath in another direction?"

"Very well," gayly laughed Mr. Wind, "that is the way I blow, but if you do not like my way I will be off and send my brother; he blows in another direction."

Before the Weathercock could reply, Mr. Wind bustled away and in a few minutes his brother was there swinging the Cock another way. But this

They started back, very slowly and wistfully, but as they neared the house they went faster and faster. Such a delicious smell came from the dining room. And there stood mother at the door.

"A liftle, inther," answered Polly.

"Well, you have been for a long you're just in time, for dinner's on the table."

They went in. The interior was us spick and span as a new pin. The odors that came from beneath the dish cover were simply indescribable. "Duck is nice with green peas, isn't it, father?" suggested Polly.

"You mother's a pretty good cook." answered father.

Mother smiled. She knew all about the man about the house.
