

Sen. Reed Expresses Strong Opinions on Religious Freedom

(By N. C. W. C. News Service)
St. Louis, Sept. 22.—Declaring that any society or group that preaches the doctrines of religious intolerance and race hatreds in the United States is an enemy of constitutional government and should be driven from the country, United States Senator James A. Reed leveled a scathing criticism at the Ku Klux Klan in an address delivered at the Constitution Day exercises of the Young Men's Hebrew Association held here in Shaare Emeth Synagogue.

Although Senator Reed did not mention the Ku Klux Klan, his statement undoubtedly was directed at that organization, which had previously been denounced by Rabbi Louis Witt and Gilbert Harris, who had preceded him.

"When you deny a man the right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience," said Senator Reed, "you deny him the right to think, or for his own soul to give expression to its aspirations. That is an attempt to enslave the mind, which is forbidden by the constitution. Any man who attempts to preach the doctrine of religious intolerance in the United States, who attempts to proscribe men because of their religious faith or stir up race hatreds is an enemy of free government and should be driven from the country."

Major Harry B. Hawes, Democratic congressional nominee, declared that the Ku Klux Klan would be an issue in every precinct in the state during the election.

"The Democratic party in this State has denounced the Ku Klux Klan," said Hawes. "I hope the leaders of the Republican party will see fit to do likewise. But whether they do or not, this organization which is preaching race hatreds and division among our people will be an issue in every precinct in the State. Men who uphold the principles of the Ku Klux Klan are not upholders of the Constitution."

The Democratic state platform, which contained a clause that was interpreted as a denunciation of the Ku Klux Klan, did not mention the organization by name.

Small Classes and the State of New York

The Darrow School of Business has the following explanation from the Department of Education regarding the desirability of a school in small classes:

"The aim of your school is to train and plan, certainly, but also to give a personal attention to each pupil. In my judgment there should be at least one teacher for every five pupils."
