FLAPPER GOT IN A WORD

Not Much to Say, but There Was a World of Meaning in Her Simple Question.

For once the very modern girl's flapper sister faded into the background. She sat and munched English muffins and sipped tea while the very modern girl gossiped ecstatically with the old school friend from out of town, who wore a shiny new ring on the fourth finger of her left hand.

The out-of-town girl did most of the talking—her fingers, the color of her new gowns, the darling showers the girls had given her, Jack's wonderful devotion. She babbling on without stopping to catch her breath, while the very modern girl leaned forward with sparkling eyes, anticipating the good time she would have spreading the news, and the flapper slouched in her chair and dug her teeth into the English muffins.

"And now, tell me, what is Jack like?" demanded the very modern girl. "Who is he like? Any of the boys we used to know?"

The engaged girl reflected. "No," she hesitated, "I don't know anyone just like Jack. Except—well, mother says he's a lot like me. He's full of fun and very generous, and such a gentleman! And he's awfully clever, too, and talks so intelligently."

The flapper stirred and stopped chewing.

"Did you say he was like you?" she demanded suddenly.
