Usually the first thing learns is the time of day. A foreinger crooked and held up, then four fingers held un, signifies a quarter to four. If the crooked finger moves to either side it means a quarter past four. The pupil watches the movements of the lips. At first he can only comprehend their meaning where the words are simple and the movements are exaggerated. In a surprisingly short time, however, he is able to talk to his fellow workmen with perfect ease, during the intervals when the looms do not need all of his attention.
