Three-Quarter Length Coat of Wool
 at With Coat Front

should avoid high collars and collars that are perpendicular in line. For such collars add inches to the skirt.
 The overall length of a coat often has an unhappy influence on the extremely severe, ribbed, pointed coats. Even so, this type of coat emphasizes the very features the wearer attempts to conceal. A short coat should not only cut the body in a flattering way, but give the figure a rounder effect.
 The woman who is tall and slender by its proportion to the length of her walk should avoid any coat that has a line which is even with the top of her shoulders, and a skirt which is normal or low.

Chintz Gown Novelty
Makes Its Appearance
 An absolute novelty is the chintz gown that has made its appearance in designs by Parisian artists. It is so well liked that many charming models of it are shown by American designers. Chintz was first introduced in garden benches and became the later fashion and it has also been used by some of the best French couturiers to establish gowns of novel formality for afternoon and evening wear.
 Philippe et Gaston have designed a strikingly handsome and decidedly elaborate collection of chintz. The enclosed lower portion which is fastened with buttons is combined with a plain plain skirt.
 In another model, an evening gown of Parisian fashion is shown. The skirt is lovely, with a lace or brocade pattern. The pattern is traced and pointed with high lights of brilliant crystal beads.
In Patchwork Design
 Several of the latest models show a curious new effect in a trimming consisting of squares of bright colored silk that form a patchwork design. One of these is a short, fitted pattern which is made to look on the front like a patchwork of colors of chintz.

Especially Familiar
 There are two types of evening gowns in great favor. One is the simple black satin gown with any ornamentation at all. The other is a black satin gown with a high collar and a long, pointed skirt.

One can safely say that the most popular style of evening gown is the simple black satin gown with any ornamentation at all.
