New Germany Pays Honor To Epic Poem Of Catholic Writer

Cologne, March 16—One of the most beautiful lyrical works in the German language, long neglected because it had a distinctly Catholic flavor, has just won proper general recognition.

This work is the poem "Dreschhinden" (Thirteen Linné Trees), by the Westphalian Catholic poet Friedrich Wilhelm Weber. It was written in 1873, and its name recalls the ancient monastery the Benedictine monks established in Westphalia in the time of Charlemagne to convert the heathen Saxons to Christianity. Dreschhinden was the name of this venerable foundation.

The poem, written in brilliant style has for its theme the contrasting of the simple Saxon pagans with the cultivated Frankish tribes whose Christianity was little more than a name at that time. Immediately upon its appearance, the worth of the work was recognized by Catholics, and it ran through many editions. A drama was made of it, and was produced many times. But in Germany little or no place and the reader knows it in schools was forbidden under the old Nationalist regime, because of its Catholic character.

Since the Revolution, however, and the fall of the old Protestant rulers,

Two English Priests Gain Council Seats By Large Majorities

(By N. C. W. C. News Service).

London, March 26.—Father James Mahoney, of Deptford, had the largest majority of any candidate in the country area in the London County Council election, results of which have just been declared. He also polled more votes than any other candidate.

In the Cumberland County Council election Father Clayton, O. S. B. more than doubled his opponent's figures. His opponent had previously declared that Father Clayton had not the temperament of a fighter. priest was carried shoulder high by his supporters from the council chamber after the declaration of the poll.

"Dreschhinden" has been introduced into the schools, and students of literature have generally admitted that it is a classic. It is now regarded as a great piece of German literature. Even the famous Universitätsbibliothek of Leipzig, which positively refuses to publish distinctly Catholic works, has now published the Catholic poet's epic in a special edition, terming it "a classical story of love and conversion of the Ninth Century."

Following its publication, critics have taken up the poem, finding it good, and it is expected that other works of the Westphalian Catholic will soon be published for general reading.
