Sacred Heart Parish To Have A New $300,000 Church

Rev. George V. Burns, rector of the Church of the Sacred Heart, announced Thursday that contracts have been let on the church's new edifice. The building will house more than 1,000 people. The church has been growing during the fourteen years of the church's existence, a growth that all has taken place under the leadership of the same rector. There now are nine hundred families in the parish.

Charles H. Prindiville, Chicago architect who designed the new Pittsburgh Cathedral, designed the new Church of the Sacred Heart. Two ninety-six foot towers will flank the single Gothic arch of the double doorway, above which will be a five divided window of colored glasses. The church will be 165 feet long and will seat 1,000 persons. The nave will be sixty feet and four inches wide and the transepts will each be 97 feet wide. The entire structure will be built of buff Indiana limestone from the Bedford quarries. The church is connected to a microphone in the pulpit, will be located under each of the arches, carrying the priests voices to all parts of the large edifice.

Soon after Father Burns organized the parish in 1911, the present church and school building was erected. The church was dedicated by Bishop Thomas F. Hick on November 26th of that year. Ten years later, it was necessary to add six more rooms to the school and the new church building is being erected. The present house of worship will be converted into additional classrooms.

There were 706 pupils in the school last year, taught by seventeen teachers. In June, sixty-three pupils were graduated. The teachers are members of the order of Sisters of St. Joseph for whom the parish maintains a convent at Lake and Clay avenues.

Rev. Daniel B. O'Rourke and Rev. C. Stewart Hogan are assistants to Father Burns in the work of the parish.

Cliff Haven

Cliff Haven, N. Y., July 31.—All

Cliff Haven journeyed to the Railroad Station Sunday noon to await the arrival of the 12:10 train on which His Eminence Patrick Cardinal Hayes, returning from Cardinal Be-gin's funeral, was a passenger. The train's arrival was enthusiastically greeted. Cardinal Hayes took advantage of the brief stop at Cliff Haven to bid farewell to the large gathering from the car platform. Flags were waved until the New York bound train could no longer be seen. Rev. John D. Rosch, President of the Catholic Summer School headed a delegation which met the Cardinal's train at Plattsburg.

Rev. Michael Andrew Chapman, Editor of Our Sunday Visitor was the preacher at the 10:30 mass Sunday morning. Father Chapman, in the course of his sermon declared that the greatest missionary sermon that could possibly be preached is the good Catholic life. We are all called upon to be saints, although we may not be startling examples of sanctity. There's our duty. We speak of the examples of the saints, of St. Ann. What about the example that we are giving? We owe a debt to each other, to all our Catholic brethren and to those outside the fold. We are bound to pray for them; to give them good example. The practicing Catholic is very close to sanctity. Saints are more than examples; they procure for us the graces that we may need until by God's great favor, we join them.

During the week Rev. Michael Andrew Chapman, Editor of Our Sunday Visitor, and well-known author gave a series of five lectures on "Twenty Years of G.K.C." Beginning with an account of the early years of Chesterton's career as a newspaper man, Father Chapman followed the development of his style and his philosophy through the years of searching after truth, in its literary, artistic, and religious aspect, up to the author's entrance into the Catholic Church.

The first lecture dealt with the Chestertonian period, when Gilbert Chesterton, his brother Cecil, and Hilaire Belloc formed a literary triumvirate which set all cultured Europe agog. The place of the leader or editorial essay in English journalism was treated, and the beginnings of what Father Chapman called "The Literary cult of G.K.C." were illustrated by readings from the early works of the author. The second lecture of the series took up the more serious aspect of Mr. Chesterton's writing. The book "Heretics" was the first outspoken championship of Catholicity, and was written several years before Chesterton's submission to the Holy See. As a review of modernisms and philosophies, it has no equal. As a piece of writing it is perhaps, the best thing Chesterton ever did. These were the years when G.K.C. turned his attention to literary criticism, and his writings on the various authors are of permanent value to the student of literature. Father Chapman read selections from the "Victorian Age in Literature" as well as from "Heretics" during his lecture.

In a somewhat lighter vein, the third lecture dealt with Chesterton's novels and detective stories, and the consideration was given to the fact that the English novel is usually a "tract" intended to forward some propaganda. If it does this in an amusing way the effect is apt to be more striking and successful. The fourth lecture on Thursday morning was entirely occupied with the consideration of the book of "Orthodoxy" which Father Chapman characterized as the leading modern apologetic for the Catholic Religion, all the more valuable because written by a non-Catholic. Readings from the book led to a discussion of the Anglican mind, G.K.C.'s conversion, and the value of Catholic writings to the non-Catholic world.

The closing lecture of the course took up the poetical works of Chesterton, with readings from a number of his poems, both serious and in ballad form. Chesterton's poems are often light and jovial, never frivolous. The Catholic tone of the religious verse written before his conversion was especially noted. The lecture closed with remarks on Mr. Chesterton's new venture in the world of journalism, "G.K.'s Weekly" and a general summary and appreciation of his contribution to the literature of our time.

Father Chapman's style as a lecturer is informal, interspersed with readings from the author under discussion. His remark that the course would be "mostly Chesterton" and very very little Chapman" showed that the purpose of the lectures was to stir up interest in his hearers in the study of this great modern Catholic writer, rather than to furnish a few moments of amusement to those who attended the course.

Rev. J. Elliott Ross C.S.P., recently appointed chaplain at Newman Hall, Columbia University, New York, a noted writer on Ethics and kindred subjects gave four evening lectures on "Catholics and Evolution", "Restriction on Teachers", "Church and State in Education" and "Education for Marriage". The large audience which assembled in the Auditorium of the Summer School each evening bears witness to the popularity of the noted Paulist Father.
