

A. O. of H. Praised For Service By Pres. Coolidge

(By N. C. W. C. News Service)

Atlantic City, N. J.—The work of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in promoting the assimilation of Irish immigrants in America was praised by President Coolidge in a message read at the opening session of the national convention of the A. O. H. and the Ladies' Auxiliary. The President's message addressed to Michael Donohoe of Philadelphia, President of the organization, reads: "My attention having been called to the fact that the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies' Auxiliary are to hold their annual convention at Atlantic City a few days hence, I am writing to ask if you will be good enough to express to the gathering my warmest greetings and most cordial wishes. Your Order has, for many years, made a continuing and important contribution to the best ideals of our country, particularly toward enabling it to assimilate the great and valuable Irish element which has come to us. I cannot express a better wish than the splendid service that has been rendered in the past may be continued in the future."

Favor Light Wines and Beer
Resolutions adopted by the convention advocated modification of the Volstead Act to permit the sale of light wines and beer; condemned the present immigration law as an encouragement to the "bootlegging of human beings," opposed American adherence to the International High Court of Justice on the ground that that body is a "cardboard court which is simply the creature of the League of Nations," expressed distrust of extensive naval disarmament and urged the Government to subsidize the merchant marine "to meet the competition of rivals and provide a training school for seamen upon our ships of war," characterized birth control and eugenic fads as a challenge both to nature and the sanctity of the marriage relation, reducing the procreation of human beings to the coarse level of the barnyard; and urged a more accurate presentation of the facts of history in school textbooks. The resolution urging modification of the Volstead Act reads in part:

"To restrain a natural appetite by legislation has ever been futile, and the invasion of the rights or the person of his domicile are incompatible with the perpetuity of democracy. We believe in obedience to law. But not in the imposition upon an unwilling majority of an unenforceable law; and we deny the right of a moral issue to convert itself into an engine of corruption, crashing through the rights which have hitherto guarded the privacy of the people and disseminating covertly, through illegitimate means, stimulants dangerous to health and life."

Another resolution expressed the belief that the expected development of the Irish economic system would draw forth latent abilities in the Irish race and urged members of the A. O. H. and Auxiliary to give preference to goods of Irish origin when purchasing imported articles.

On the opening day of the convention there was a reference to the present restricted immigration laws by the Rev. Dr. Joseph M. Corrigan of Overbrook Seminary, Philadelphia. Dr. Corrigan said:

"This country will have traveled very far from the principles of freedom which inspired the founders when it ceases to offer an opportunity to the poor and oppressed of any nation who come here willing to work and only asking that they be allowed to give their children a better opportunity than they had."

Scopes Trial Criticized
Dr. Corrigan also referred to the Scopes trial and the Tennessee anti-evolution law as follows:

"The Catholic people have never attempted to write into the statute books such a restriction as is the basis for the trial in Tennessee which is making us a laughing-stock before the eyes of the world. We call attention to this trial because it is an object lesson which proves the value of the warning which the Catholic Church has been sounding in the ears of this nation for five generations, namely, that it cannot have a complete system of education which ignores the relationship between man and his Maker."

The restrictive immigration laws were also referred to by National President Donohoe in his address to the convention. He expressed the wish that Irish home industry and prosperity might soon reduce emigration from that country to negligible figures but added that while emigration from that country is still heavy it should not be unduly restricted by the United States. Mr. Donohoe expressed the belief that the desire of British colonies and dominions for virtue immigrants might have something to do with the American policy of restriction.

Mr. Donohoe denounced the Ku Klux Klan and called attention to the possibility of such a secret order being used to further the designs of foreign interests. He said:

"It is about time for us to serve notice on all whom it may concern and especially upon responsible heads of the Government, that we cannot afford to ignore these underground empires and their night-gowned dupes. The Ku Klux Klan is perhaps the most un-Christian, the most harmful influence in America today."

Excavations On Site Of Jerusalem Wall Uncover Old Mosaic

By Dr. Alexander Mombelli,

(Jerusalem Correspondent, N. C. W. C. News Service.)

Jerusalem, July 22.—Excavations on the site of the Third Wall of Jerusalem have uncovered a stretch of the wall forty-five meters long and have brought to light a mosaic believed to be of the later Byzantine period. Pits sunk on either side of the wall have now reached the bedrock upon which the foundations are laid.

The mosaic was found near the outer side of the wall. A Greek inscription on it declares that the tomb of a priestess is underneath and that near this spot there was once a small Christian chapel.

Another recent discovery of archaeological value is a column of the early Roman period, unearthed in the village of Tabot near Beke, Syria. This column will be placed in the National Museum at Beirut.

The roses of our days become
The fragrance of the past;
Our hearts are like the songs we sing,
Their music cannot last.

But every petal drifting down
The garden of the years
Shall be, dear heart, a memory
Untouched by doubt or fears.

SALADS, SUMMER DISHES

The refreshing tomato is a most acceptable basis for many salads. Its color is not of the least of its attractions; being rich in vitamins, the tomato should be used freely.

Peel and slice rather thick slices from very ripe but firm tomatoes. Arrange on head lettuce and cover each slice with chopped pineapple and celery, which has been marinated with a good French dressing. Just before serving keep a spoonful of thick mayonnaise on the lettuce.

Sliced Tomato and Cucumber.—For a simple salad, the following is most attractive: Arrange on an oblong platter overlapping slices of ripe, red tomato, then a row of sliced cucumber overlapping. Serve with a bowl of mayonnaise, passed with the salad.

The divided dishes which hold several food accessories may be used for salads. Serve either lettuce, cucumber or tomato plain; pass the divided dish which contains half a cupful or less of three or four salad materials, chopped celery, chopped pepper, chopped or diced onion. One may help oneself to just the favorite vegetable, making one's own salad.

A rich dessert which is well-liked and may be prepared the day before is the following: Take one-half pound of fresh sweet butter, soften it to a cream with a wooden spoon. When creamy add one cupful of confectioner's sugar, gradually, until all is added. When thoroughly blended add six egg yolks, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Add the desired flavoring and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. The mixture is now ready for molding. Line a mould with lady fingers, fill with the cream and set away in the ice chest for 24 hours, when it will be ready to serve.

today. Our chief concern regarding the Ku Klux Klan is the fear that it may prove helpful to other foreign agencies that are actively engaged in an effort to drag America from her old moorings and align her with the forces of imperialism."

World Court Opposed
The Hibernian President then warned the delegates against acceptance of propaganda in favor of American participation in the International Court of Justice, calling that body a disguised League of Nations. Miss Mary MacSwiney, sister of the late Lord Mayor of Cork, addressed the convention and predicted that Ireland would continue its efforts for liberation until complete independence had been achieved. She deprecated the present status of Ireland, saying:

"You have been told that Ireland has freedom now. That is untrue. No nation is free which is bound to give allegiance to an alien whose country is partitioned by an alien, which cannot vote one penny of its own money without first obtaining consent of an alien. That is the position of Ireland under the so-called 'Free State'."

The Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Walsh, Bishop of Trenton, in an address on the opening day of the convention, urged the Hibernians to open naturalization schools to aid Catholic foreign-born men and women to "become good citizens of the United States." Bishop Walsh said, "The most important awaiting solution by the nation today."

Bouffant Frocks for Young Girls

Simplicity. Youthfulness. Feature Party Dresses Shown in Paris.

This year Paris insists upon two qualities for the girls' party dress. The first of these, observes a Paris writer in the New York Herald-Tribune, is simplicity and the second youthfulness. Slim lines and bouffant frocks have authentic places in the current mode, but the latter is considered more unusual and can be attractively worn by the girl of debutante age. Among others, she may choose the full, picturesque robe de style with its wide, round skirt, often trimmed with exquisite embroidery. This year Lanvin is dotting her skirts like radiant confetti of silk or metal powdered over a taffeta or organdie frock. A dress of this type should, of course, have the wide oval décolletage slipping off the shoulders, which is becoming to the neck and shoulders of the younger girl. As sleeves are an important factor in this season's fashions, it should have little puff sleeves on 1890 lines. The corsage should be a semi-fitting affair with seams, but entirely innocent of anything resembling a bone, for if it were anything but entirely supple it would scarcely find place in the modern wardrobe.

Godets, flat plaits and flounders either plisse or gathered, are all used for the new fullness. It has a delightful manner of springing into life when the wearer walks or dances, and youth especially will be delighted to find itself able to indulge in all the intricacies of the new dances without the worry of wondering how long the side seam is going to hold out or the dress some drawback of having every other step cut short by the limitations of an overtight skirt. The modern girl demands her fair share of freedom, and Paris sees that she gets it, at least as far as her frocks are concerned.

Straight-line party frocks are also the portion of youth this summer. Fashion has been indulgent enough to put in a new type of fullness that is partly concealed when the wearer is in repose, retaining the slim line that has been popular so long and that is still a prime favorite despite the many attempts made to bring in something new.

The straight-line frock ending in a flounce that may be put straight onto the frock or headed with lines of tucks or embroidery is one that is popular and very becoming to youthful figures. It has grace and charm and is much liked in Paris.

Exercise Great Care in Choosing New Stockings

Stockings show more variation this spring than they have for these many seasons past. Paris no longer possesses an array of women all wearing apricot stockings irrespective of the color of the dress or costume. Today, with the new grays and black and white effects, plain gray stockings are attractively worn. Bois de rose tints are correct for gowns in bois de rose colorings, though the stockings should be just a shade paler than the dress. With the new blue and green frocks great care must be exercised in choosing the stockings. The safest rule is to see that they match exactly the beige of the plain pull-on suede gloves that usually appear in a soft neutral tint of that color. For the evening there are also some new shades in stockings. These are so pale that the effect is always that of flesh color, but it is a flesh tending toward a delicate yellowish cream rather than to the mauve and pink shades that were worn last season.

Annabel Hopping and a Bell-Hop

By K. G. STOTT

(© 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

Bill dreamed.

He dreamed all the time. Early and late. In season and out. It hurt his standing with the management. It got under the skin of the "Captain." It brought him twice late for drill. It once earned him, but his Irish smile got him back on the bench.

Bill was a bell-hop. He was a good bell-hop. He could smile when a wealthy lumberman from the nearby mountainous timberlands slipped him a dime which should have been a quarter.

Bill smiled himself out of the giant hotel. He smiled himself into a huge concern—the largest lumber works in Tacoma. And in doing so he smiled himself into a long series of difficulties. For the distinguished J. H. Wade had fallen hard for that smile.

"Bill, we can use you," he declared. "We can make a great lumberman out of you."

But the great J. H. Wade, who shipped to a hundred ports, did not take the necessary time, thoroughly to understand Bill. And as a matter of fact he shot him into an office cage with some young fry and spoke hurriedly to an office foreman and left Bill to work out an industrial career.

Poor Bill!

In a week he had that foreman in a cold sweat. He had failed to grasp the very first principles of the business details assigned him, and in three days he was working in the shipping department under the general heading of "Unskilled Labor."

Here Wade, the commercial genius, found him—sleeping. Bill had worked until his slender frame could bear no more burdens. He had hidden between tall stacks of lumber. Here a little later the great Wade cursed him and sent him out into the cruel world. Even the wonder smiles failed.

Bill still dreamed. He dreamed in a nice room in a rival hotel. He dreamed to the tune of about eight dollars a day, little thinking of the scant three hundred that rested in the savings bank. He dreamed of the days when he would be of age—three long years. He dreamed his one own dream—the one he had never confessed to anybody.

One night he met a wonderful girl. She danced much better than anybody he had ever seen.

Then she asked Bill to take her out to dinner. Little by little they became most intimate friends, and little by little—or big by big, Bill's three hundred was getting down on its last legs.

"You've never asked my first name, Bill," she said very coyly one evening between fox-trots.

He smiled—and dreamed.

"Not likely, too, either. Your last name is bad enough. Same as the big bum who hired me and then tried me. I like you, but I'd rest easier if your name wasn't Wade. Gosh, I'd crouch if you happened to belong to any of the same family-tree. They're nuis!"

She patted his hand gently.

"Don't discard me because of that—no danger."

Bill felt happier and the smiles came back.

"Bill, you once told me you'd tell me your dream. Let's have it tonight—then I'll let you take me out and buy me lots of candy and lots of flowers."

"Not so good, honey-girl." He drew himself up to his best proportions. "I've fallen for you, Annabel Wade. And I'm going to give you the low-down tonight. I'm down to my last X—my last tender. I have been living on a taller bill than the city of Tacoma is built on. I've grained and I've grained, and I've dreamed, and I've spent. Tomorrow I'll take any old job that comes my way."

She caught both his arms.

"Oh, you're broke, aren't you? Oh, I'm so happy. I—"

He removed her hands from his sleeves.

"I guess I don't follow you. Most of the money went on you. And now you have the nerve to—"

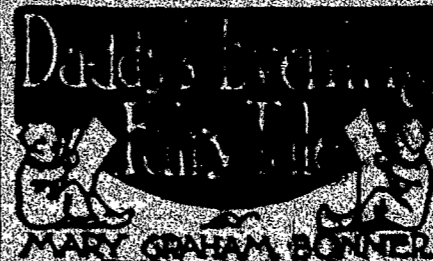

"I have the nerve to tell you the whole truth. I'm the daughter of the great J. H. himself. I worked in one of his offices because I am not ashamed to work in vacation time. I want to be worthwhile—as dad is. I liked you at first and found out where you had gone. Then I decided to make you spend all your money—on me, if necessary. Because—Oh, Bill—because! And I've told dad all about you—and about me. And he's sending a freighter to London with hope next week. And you are going—and you're going to stop this silly dreaming and spending and get ready to make a living. You smiled yourself into dad's heart and he's forgotten all your mistakes and given you your chance—your chance to make a man of yourself."

Now to conclude truthfully, Annabel was only seventeen, and when Bill made the first trip over the pond, he left only a picture of his smiling face.

But you have heard of Bill Hastings, the hop king? Well, he claims he got his bell-hopping, but his biggest progress came from Annabel-hopping.

Clock Has Lasted Long

The oldest clock still in working order regulates the time for the French city of Rouen. It was built by John de Felaine in 1399, and a pendulum was added in 1714. It strikes the hours, half-hours, and quarters with unfailing regularity and keeps excellent time.

CHAMELEON AND LIZARD

"I wish I could talk," said the Chameleon.

"You wish a good deal," said the Leopard Lizard. "But you can talk your own talk and make yourself understood by those who are your relatives."

"Yes," said the Chameleon, "that is true."

"And you can show people how you feel and what you think by your change of colors," said another lizard.

"That is true, too," said the Chameleon. "But I wish I could talk the language of grown-ups and children, for if I could I would say something to them."

"What would you say?" asked the lizards.

"I would tell them a few things they don't seem to know," answered the Chameleon. "I heard some people talking the other day when they were looking at us and they said that they wished they had come lizards for pets, and one of them said she especially wanted a chameleon."

"Well, wasn't that a compliment?" asked the lizards.

"Perhaps in one way it was," said the Chameleon, "but the sad thing was that they said we could be set next to worms and flies but that we didn't care to drink water."

"Did they really say that?" asked the lizards. "How could they say it without a thing?"

"Because," said the Chameleon, "they had known of someone who owned a Chameleon and the Chameleon didn't want water out of a little dish of water which they gave him."

"Of course the Chameleon wanted to drink dew-drops and because the people didn't know if they didn't think he wanted to drink at all."

"And so I wish I could tell people that if they have pet chameleons, also little pets which will eat from their master's or mistress's saucer, that we do need and want water, but they must sprinkle greens in our cages, so we can drink in our usual way."

"These people said their chameleons grew quite ill and they gave him away. I hope they gave him to some one who knew about chameleons."

"They did," said the lizards, "for we heard that he'd been given to a man. We heard them say that. And we

"Am a Little Crawling Thing," happ, dear Chameleon, the lower will call people at your ways, so they'll know more."

The Chameleon was happy about that, and after a little silence the Leopard Lizard spoke again. "I am very handsome, friends," he said, "and I have a fine name. Just think of being called a Leopard Lizard. Doesn't it sound wild and fierce and brave and splendid?"

"Well," said the others, "according to you it sounds like a great many fine things."

"You must admit, haven't you, that you think so, too?" asked Leopard Lizard.

"Yes," the others admitted, "it is a fine name."

"I am a little crawling thing," said the Chameleon, "and I am given the name of one of the great animals of the forest. Ah, it is an honor," said the Leopard Lizard.

"How do you suppose you were ever given such a name?" asked the others.

"Well, I suppose it is because of my colorings," said Leopard Lizard, "and not because I act like a leopard."

"We admire you," the others said, "for telling the truth, and not making yourself out to be something you are not."

"Thank you, thank you," said Leopard Lizard, wriggling delightedly. He liked to be thought well of by his companions.

"Are your colorings like a leopard's?" asked the Chameleon.

"We don't know much of leopard," said a lizard.

"We're glad we don't," said a second, "though of course a Leopard Lizard is quite quite different," he added politely.

"I am spotted," said the Leopard Lizard, "and the leopard is spotted. My body, as you see, is of a pale brown color, almost a tan or yellow shade, and I have black spots all over me, and red spots, too. The red spots are smaller than the black ones."

"I have most interesting markings," I am told, but I do believe that I am just because I am spotted that I am called the Leopard Lizard."

"We're glad to know the reason," said the others, and the Leopard Lizard smiled a lizard's smile and said:

"My tail is long and thin, and you notice a creature's tail when he says it is so interestingly marked."
