RECOVERY OF SACRED RELIC OF ST. ANNE, AFTER LATEST FIRE, JOY TO CATHOLIC WORLD

Wrist Bone of Miracle-Worker of Beaupre Found in Vault in Sanctuary—Noted Statue and Bell Lost

Material Damage $500,000

Quebec, P. Q., Nov. 8.—To the joy and gratification of the Catholic faithful throughout the world, announcement was made today that the sacred wrist-bone of Saint Anne de Beaupre had been preserved from the fire that razed the temporary basilica of the famous church there yesterday. The holy relic, together with several others, had been locked in a vault in the sacristy before the building took fire, and was found to be merely scorched when taken from the safe many hours later.

A number of valuable paintings, including the celebrated "Le Pelerin Kany" valued at $50,000, several statues and many smaller and less widely-known relics also were found to be intact. The Sacred Host, the noted Statue of Saint Anne, which stood in the church, and the ancient bell were lost. The material loss is estimated at $500,000.

The permanent basilica, being built on an adjacent plot to replace the one burned down in 1925, was only slightly damaged. The origin of the fire, which was discovered by Brother Fidelis of the Redemptorists, who slept in the vestry, has not been determined.

"Lourdes of America" Known as the "Lourdes of America," the Basilica and Shrine of Saint Anne de Beaupre, in the little village of Beaupre not far from the capital of Quebec, is the most famous in the New World. Miraculous cures beyond all computation have been effected there, and pilgrims from all over the United States and Canada gather there annually for observance of the feast of Saint Anne, July 26.

Belgium's Prince Marries Princess Astrid Of Sweden

Brussels, Nov. 10.—Archbishop Van Roey, successor of Cardinal Mercier, this morning united in marriage Princess Astrid of Sweden and Crown Prince Leopold, future ruler of the Belgians. Although Astrid is a Protestant, the canonical Catholic rites for such ceremonies were used, and the wedding took place in the ancient Cathedral of St. Gudule, one of the most magnificent old gothic edifices in Europe.

Two hundred thousand lined Brussels' beautiful streets to watch the passing of the royal wedding party and afterward massed in a huge concourse before the cathedral. For the marriage, a love match and fraught with a dozen romantic angles had captivated the heart of the Belgian nation. Utmost enthusiasm reigned among the people.

All the ancient panoply of Belgian royalty was brought into play, lending a rich picturesqueness as well as pomp to the event. Twenty thousand veteran soldiers, who had seen service in the great World War, were lined up under command of a thousand officers in flashing uniforms. The bride and groom were seen in the distance. Day had Brussels seen

During Holy Year, 1925, more than 200,000 of the faithful visited the famous shrine, there to pray at the basilica and thus obtain the same indulgences as were offered for visiting any basilica in Europe. It was somewhat more than four years ago that fire swept through the old basilica, destroying everything except the statue of the Mother of the Blessed Virgin. The statue was subsequently removed to a niche above the portals of the temporary basilica, a wooden structure, which served the vast throngs of pilgrims during Holy Year. The old "Pilgrim's Bell," which then crashed from the belfry of the burning building without breaking, also was swung above the wooden structure, where it continued to peal out the hours as it had for nearly three centuries before.

Three Centuries of History The history of Saint Anne goes back to the early seventeenth century, when France was colonizing Canada and the valley of the Mississippi. First there was the little church of logs. This, according to tradition, was erected by a company of sailors in fulfillment of a vow they had made when their tiny craft was crippled in a raging storm in the North Atlantic, to provide a place of veneration, on being succored, for the Saint who was regarded in their native Brittany with marked devotion.

It was in this crude cabin that the first miraculous cure for bodily ailments was wrought, and in the centuries that followed the shrine has been the focus point of millions of pilgrims seeking and finding relief. The foundations of the great stone church that was burned in 1922 were laid in 1872, and fifteen years later His Holiness Leo XIII raised it to the dignity of a basilica minor. The Redemptorist Fathers have had charge of the Sanctuary since 1878.

When the cathedral they were greeted by a great surging shout from the people. A salute of cannon was drowned to a muffled boom. Archbishop Van Roey, heading the bishops of Belgium in the colorful array of their ecclesiastical robes, met the party at the portal of the cathedral. Greeting the bridal couple, he said: "You have come to kneel in this glorious temple to ask Him upon whom all life depends for consecration of your alliance, and you have done rightly."

Within the party were met by a vista of ancient Sixteenth century Flemish tapestry hangings, flower-strewn floors and a flower-banked altar. A choir of 100 boys and 60 men sang Dubois' Benediction as the bridal couple advanced up the aisle to the kneeling benches covered with red velvet embroidered richly with gold.

The service was comparatively short, and was simple. It lasted only forty minutes. Then, after the responses had been made which supplemented the previous civil ceremony and finally made the future rulers of the Belgians man and wife, the party passed from the cathedral to be greeted by another ovation from the scores of thousands still waiting outside. A reception at the royal palace followed, after which Leopold and Astrid departed on their honeymoon.

Diplomatic representatives of many countries attended the ceremony, including William Phillips, the American Ambassador.

FATHER ROCHESTER.

To make his children happy, And from life's worries free. He brightly lights their way, Where e'er that may be.

He brooks no interference, That gangs his lights aglee, When rosy red turns his cheek, The Rain God's on a spree.

His dog gives up the chase, While hunting for a flea, Who passed the buck to the alley cat, And barked him up a tree.

Then he madly jumped his flivver, Along troubles course to flee, The kids lined 'long the banks, Did clap and shout with glee.

Step on her Pop they cried, Results you soon will see, From Court Street to Mount Morris, While he dammed the Genesee.

PICCADILLY THEATER

With Richard Dix and other popular male stars covering themselves with athletic glory in stirring stories of American college life, Bebe Daniels decided it was high time for the feminine sex to bestir itself and prove that life at a girl's college also has its glamor and thrills. Consequently she is appearing at the Piccadilly all next week, beginning Sunday in a breezy tale of co-ed life that comes to a climax in a track meet between two girls' teams that is said to have all the heart throbbing interest and suspense that goes with the regular thing.

Charles Paddock, world's fastest human, James Hall and El Brindel, musical comedy stars, and other well known figures appear in the supporting cast.

Supplementary features for the week include a comedy, "King Bozo," Arthur Newberry and his Piccadilly Jazz Orchestra and other screen features.

REGENT THEATER.

Thomas Meighan will come to the Regent Sunday for the entire week in "Tin Gods," a picture version of William Anthony McGuffee's poignant romance of the same name, which is said to offer the popular star one of the most striking and appealing characterizations that have come his way since "The Miracle Man" and "Male and Female." A notable supporting cast includes Renee Adoree, captivating feminine star of "The Big Parade," Alleen Pringle, William Powell and Hale Hamilton.

No one who has a radio is unfamiliar with "Roxie and Her Gang" and their sparkling radio programs. One of the most talented of the gang, Margaret McKee, whistler and song novelist, will come to the Regent as the musical feature on next week's program. She will offer a program that has been selected for its wide appeal and will include many novel features. One of these involves the use of a motion picture which she accompanies with new song hits and whistling effects that proved popular over the radio.
