Straight Coat Is Popular in Paris

Variety Is Supplied by Use of Furs, Patch Decoration, Stitching.

The straight-line coat, given variety by contrasting inset pieces, by tuck-stitching, by patch decoration of fur and other novel ways of trimming, is generally accepted as the foundation of the Paris mode in new coats. A Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Times. Other patterns are shown, of course. The bloused-back model is very chic; the coat with fitted waist and full skirt is shown frequently, even the cape coat has its devotees among the couturiers. But the straight coat with perhaps a barely perceptible flare, is the one most in favor.

For one thing, a straight-line coat affords an admirable surface for applying an infinite number of different trimming ideas, as the French designers have not been slow to recognize. "Patchwork" consisting of inset patterns as patiently and tediously pieced together as was ever the patchwork of our grandmothers, is a favorite method of enhancing the beauty of these new garments. Patou has employed it on a bottle-green coat in the new collection, boasting one of the popular and graceful full-length tuxedo collars that seem destined for a great vogue this season. This roll collar is of beaver, though the coat itself was lined in chipmunk. Linings of short-haired furs are being called upon to supply the necessary warmth that give fur coats their vogue. The patchwork on this coat consists of a border of rather large,

Diamond-shaped insets of velvet in a deep grape-purple shade, set in on the lower skirt and on the sleeve above the beaver cuffs.

Applied strappings afford many original trimming arrangements on these straight-line coats. Jeanne Lanvin has completely creased the shoulders of a straight coat in beige kasha with one-inch strappings of kasha in a darker shade. These straps run from the shoulders, two-thirds the coat length, where they terminate squarely, but are so gauged in length that they form a Y on both the back and front of the coat. The full-length tuxedo collar serves on this coat also, the lining being made of light brown astrakhan.

Another coat in dress of wine kasha, cut more characteristically of the Lanvin collection, savors of the Russian influence that she is enthusiastic about just now. This coat had a huge draped Russian collar of wace leather matching as nearly as possible the color of the coat. A row of large buttons fastens the coat neatly from hem to neck on the left side, and one of Lanvin's amusing, round accordion-pouch pockets, nearly two inches across, focuses attention on the right side of the coat. The fur-trimmed cuffs and the trimming on the pockets are of leather.

Sometimes the lining of the coat is merely the go-between uniting two entirely dissimilar fabrics as it does in an ensemble.

Stoles Are Smart

Nothing is smarter for moderate weather with a tailored suit than a long fur stole. Many of the smartest are made of two or even three fox pelts, but with only one head and tail mounted on them. Gray astrakhan is emphasized as a popular fur for winter and some cloth coats have the entire sleeves made of the gray fur reproduced in each of the accessories.

Tricolor Outfits

Three-color combinations in ensembles are a feature of the vogue. While some are worked out in one tone, such as black trimmed with three other colors, there are many other interesting devices for expressing the three-color fashion.
