Fight For Religious Schools Is Started By Cardinal Bourne
London, May 18.—A national campaign to secure justice from Parliament for voluntary schools was launched here this week by Cardinal Bourne.

Prayer Book's Foes Resume Campaign For Its Rejection
(London, May 18.—Opponents of the new Anglican Prayer Book have started their campaign to defeat the measure in Parliament. Dr. Barnes, Anglican Bishop of Birmingham, addressing a meeting in his see city, declared that the Book is ambiguous in its doctrine and must lead to chaos.

The voluntary schools are threatened by religious denominations in which definite religious teaching is given. In contrast to the "comprehensive" instruction given in the schools managed by the Government, as the law stands at present, parents who desire their children to have definite religious teaching must buy the sites and pay for the building of their schools, while the others have everything provided by the State.

Dr. Barnes is not worried by threats of disestablishment if the Book is a gain thrown out by Parliament. "Who within the Church," he wants to know, "will ask for disestablishment, and with it disendowment? Not those of us who want the present proposals rejected, and certainly not the extreme Anglo-Catholics, who could not finance their churches."

The campaign begun by Cardinal Bourne is being undertaken in view of the General Election which is to take place next year. It is hoped by means of propaganda to secure the support of a majority of the voters to the demand for equal treatment as between the supporters of both types of schools. The Cardinal has instructed the Westminster Catholic Federation to organize the campaign, and to invite the co-operation of every Catholic society willing to help, especially the Knights of St. Columba who now have councils in all parts of the country.

All parliamentary candidates will be asked their views on the matter, and Catholics will cast their votes according to the answers given.

Sir Arthur Kieth's, Attack on Religion Stirs Controversy
London, May 18.—Sir Arthur Kieth, president of the British Association, has stirred up another Norwiche's nest with a new attack upon religion in which he declares that life ends with death. He aroused considerable controversy some months ago when he dogmatized concerning man's evolution.

Delivering the Ludwig Mond lecture at Manchester University this week he declared that medical men could find no ground for believing that the brain was a dual organ—a compound of substance and spirit. He said: "Every fact known to medical men compels the inference that mind, spirit, soul are the manifestations of the living brain, just as flame is the manifest spirit of a burning candle. At the moment of extinction both flame and spirit cease to have separate existence."

It is regarded as fitting that this work of art should be prepared by a Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary, since the theme assigned by the Holy Father for discussion at the Congress is "The Eucharist and Our Lady."

"However much this mode of explaining man's mentality may run counter to long and deeply cherished beliefs, medical men cannot think otherwise, if they are to believe the evidence of their senses."

The press and public men who have commented on the speech are overwhelmingly against Sir Arthur's contention.

Alfred Noyes, author and poet, says: "It is time scientists talked a little more poetry. If they can show that the greater can be contained in the less, and I shall know that the poetry of Shakespeare had its origin in floating gases."

The Fathers of the Blessey Sacrament here are collecting the flowers of devotion for the bouquet.
