St. Adalbert Relic To Be Restored To Gnesen Cathedral

Warsaw, Jan. 28.—Cardinal Hlond, Primate of Poland, has obtained for the Cathedral at Gnesen an important relic of St. Adalbert from the The relic, an arm of the saint, was removed from the Gnesen edifice by Emperor Otto III, in 1001 and taken to Rome where he had built a church in honor of St. Adalbert on the site of the ancient temple of Aesculapius. The church has been restored several times and was ultimately dedicated to St. Bartholomew, but the relic remained in the altar dedicated to St. Adalbert.

Member of a noble Bohemian family, St. Adalbert helped to convert Hungary, just then turning towards Christianity, evangelized the Poles and is known as the Apostle of Prussia. He relinquished his see as Archbishop of Gnesen to proselytize the idolatrous inhabitants of what is now Prussia. When killed by one of their pagan priests, his body is said to have been resuscitated by Boleslas I, Prince of Poland, for an equivalent weight of gold.

St. Adalbert is thought to be the author of the Polish war-song Bogurodzica.

"I believe you are doing a greater work than many will admit, not only in defending your own Church, but mainly in enlightening some of us, whose waste paper baskets are continually filled with indescribable and unbelievable anti-Catholic literature."

Bigotry Charged In Appointments In North Ireland

Belfast, Jan. 28.—The Nationalist members of the Dunganon Board of Guardians quit in a body the last monthly meeting of that group as a protest against what J. F. Stewart, one of the Nationalists, called "intolerable bigotry" in the appointment of a maternity nurse for Coalisland district.

Mr. Stewart, at the meeting, proposed for appointment to the position as nurse Mary E. Smith of Stewartstown, who, in addition to having the qualifications for the post, had, he said, been engaged in war service for five years. She was a native of the district, and her appointment, he hoped, would be unanimous.

After this nomination was seconded, the name of Nurse S. J. Thompson of Lisbellaw, County Fermanagh, was proposed and seconded. On a strictly party vote, Miss Thompson was appointed by a vote of 13 to 7.

When the vote was announced, P. Slevin, who had seconded Nurse Smith's nomination, began to sing "The Auld Flute Played only the Protestant Boys," and he declared that the members on the other side were well drilled. Mr. Stewart said that he hoped it was the last time he would hear them talk of advertising for an ex-service man or woman, and that what had just taken place was a disgrace to the district, because Miss Smith's appointment had been opposed solely on account of her religion. He also said that "it means that no Catholic or ex-service man or woman need apply to the Dunganon Board of Guardians for a position."

"It means nothing of the sort," replied W. J. McMillan, who had proposed the appointment of Nurse Thompson. "When your party was in power we didn't get much mercy from them."

The Nationalists then withdrew, and Nurse Smith entered the chamber, and declaring that the only thing the members had against her was that she was a Catholic, asked that she be given back her testimonials. She was requested to leave the meeting until its business had been transacted.
