A Model in Two-Toned Straw. A Straw-Like Cloth Model With Veil. A Straw Model in Black and White.

They are placed diagonally and are attached together invisibly or under a standing up ridge placed across the crown. They are often chosen in such contrasting colors as black and beige.

There are poppy red and grasshopper green light felt hats trimmed with small tropical bird's feather motifs that form standing-out fans or cockades.

Rose Valois is showing some Panama hats in natural tones with a fairly wide, soft brim for sports wear. She also has light felt for spring. This she is chosen in very yellow tints of red, such as vermillion, and in luminous blue-greens such as emerald.

To accompany street frocks some of the small dyed bakou and bangkok hats have no apparent brim in front, where they would be seen. Instead they have on each side of the turned-up brim at the back, a fixed-on movement that suggests a blown idea or a spiral coronal.
