Albert S. Masse, Dental Dispensary Secretary, Is Dead

Many friends will mourn the death of Albert S. Masse of Batavia, N. Y., secretary and superintendent of the Rochester Dental Dispensary since its opening 12 years ago. Mr.

ALBERT S. MASSE

Masse was stricken with apoplexy while driving home from a ball game Sunday afternoon with his son, Albert, Jr. He was taken to St. Jerome's Hospital, Batavia, and died Tuesday evening.

Mr. Masse was well known in Rochester. He did a great many kindnesses here for poor people, and for others. Always helpful, courteous, kindly and obliging, he made many friends in his work at the Dental Dispensary, and proved himself at all times a true Christian gentleman.

Mr. Masse was greatly interested in the work of the Knights of Columbus, both here and in his home city. He came often to the Columbus Building dining-rooms, and was an untiring booster for the building. He was a member and past officer of Batavia Council. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Josephine Fenton-Masse; two sons, Albert, Jr., and Francis; two daughters, Helen and Catherine; a brother, Bruce, of Los Angeles; two sisters, Mrs. James Welch of New York and Marie Louise Masse of Buffalo.

St. Margaret Mary Alacoque, Saint of the First Fridays

The Rev. Charles J. Bruton, professor of languages at Aquinas Institute, was recently appointed pastor of the parish of St. Margaret Mary by Bishop O'Hern. This is a new parish, located on lower Rogers Parkway, just off St. Paul Blvd., at Stop 4-1-2 on the Boulevard car line.

There has been much discussion about the name of the new parish. Many people never have heard of St. Margaret Mary. Some have heard a little about her. They would like to know something of her life, her work, and so The Catholic Courier & Journal has asked Father Bruton to write a series of articles on the life of the patron Saint of his church.

Rarely indeed, through the centuries that have gone by since the coming of Christ, has the voice of the most patient and forgiving Creator been heard in remonstrance or complaint. From His throne of glory above, from His tabernacle home on earth, He looks with His calm, compassionate world-wide gaze, over the sins and miseries that blight the life of His once-perfect creation.

When her fixed resolution of leaving the world was made known, the Ursulines at Mazon pressed Margaret to come to them, but a secret whisper continually sounded in her ears: "Not there—so to Holy Mary." This name was all she knew of the Daughters of the Visitation, often called Holy Marys, and its fragrance led her steadily on to the place of her rest. The instant she found herself in the parlor of the Visitation convent at Paray—she felt that her haven of peace was won.

Many a lovely picture rises before our eyes of the Castle chapel, with the Divine Presence always drawing the pre-destined child into its blessed solitude. Margaret was only four years old when she went to reside at Corcheval, and already the ties of home were far less powerful than the attraction that led her to "the same roof that sheltered the Blessed Sacrament."

Very early in her life of sacrificial love, Margaret learned that the cross and thorny crown were to be her soul was strong enough to accept the challenge of suffering and her portion; and child as she was, she used to do her best, but that she seemed to feel the greatest longing power to return love for love.

wasted away to a mere skeleton, and at last lay nearly motionless day and night. The nuns, looking on her as an angel just passing through earth to her heavenly home, would gladly have kept her with them to the end, but the doctor's advice prevailed and Madame Alacoque took Margaret home.

Years went by—no relief, no hope. "Then," Margaret tells us, "a promise was made to our Blessed Lady that if she cured me I would be one of her consecrated daughters. The moment I pronounced this thought I was cured, and moreover I felt that henceforth I belonged wholly to my Mother Mary. She made herself entirely mistress of my heart, reproved me for my faults and taught me to do the will of God. One day, while I was saying my Rosary, seated, she appeared to me and said, with an earnestness that I never forgot: 'May you be as good as you can be so negligent in my service?' Years could never efface the memory of that proof."

Years of suffering ensued. Unkind relatives made her cross of life hard for one of this world, but sweet for one of her nature. Her mother's illnesses, poverty at home, self-imposed mortifications, made her life for many years a perpetual way of the cross. Through it all, the vow that she had made to our Blessed Lady was ever before her eyes, and it only awaited the call of her Master to place her within the walls of the Visitation Nuns.

Doubts and the scruples that come to all of us were her lot as well, but she as a saint turned to Him who solves all difficulties, and as she says: "He showed me that His beauty, power and perfection were the glory of the highest heavens, and that if I would follow Him He would teach me to know Him and reveal His loveliness to me in His eternal splendor." On the spot her doubts disappeared and she renewed her vow while her Lord drew her closer to Himself and began to take possession of her whole being.

When her fixed resolution of leaving the world was made known, the Ursulines at Mazon pressed Margaret to come to them, but a secret whisper continually sounded in her ears: "Not there—so to Holy Mary." This name was all she knew of the Daughters of the Visitation, often called Holy Marys, and its fragrance led her steadily on to the place of her rest. The instant she found herself in the parlor of the Visitation convent at Paray—she felt that her haven of peace was won.

The Monastery of Paray—frequently called "The Thabor of Superiors," owing to the spirit of strict observance which reigned in it—had attained the 45th year of its foundation when on the 26th day of May, 1671, Margaret Mary Alacoque knelt for the first time in rapturous prayer before the Altar which was destined in very truth to be a new and special mercy seat. "And no sooner did I kneel down," says Margaret Mary, "than my great Master showed me that my soul was the canvass on which He would paint all the features of His life which had passed in love and privation in action and in silence, and was consummated in sacrifice."
