Irish Statesman Becomes Aviator At the Age Of 75

London, Aug. 9 .- At the age of 75, Sir Horace Plunkett, veteran Irish statesman, is learning to fly at Brooklands Airdrome. He has been warned by his friend Bernard Shaw that flying at his age is "an adventurous, agreeable and not too obvious method of suicide," but he declares he has found the lessons an excellent topic.

The work of the Catholic mission at Attawaniscat is carried on by two priests, six brothers and five Sisters. The mission is composed of a church a hospital for treatment of Indian patients and a school in which are enrolled 30 Indian pupils. There was also a sawmill conducted by the Fathers, but this was destroyed by ire several weeks ago.

The Rev. Mr. Northam said of this loss that it was a heavy one, especially since it will be a year or more before a new sawmill will be ready for operation. It is difficult to move machinery to the place, and pullding operations are not carried out with such dispatch as in more "However," he concluded, "men such as Father Saindon and his fel-low missionaries are not discouraged or daunted by a trial such as They think and deal with spiritual values and not with the naterial.'
