Dame Fashion Smiles
By Grace Jewett Austin

And now Dame Fashion is the proud owner of a duffel bag. One of these days she thinks it would be quite good fun to write a book called "Around the World With a Duffel Bag." Her new one is of good bonnie red and green Scotch plaid, such as Sir Harry Lauder might approve—and speaking of plaid reminds Dame Fashion of the fact that plaid gingham is more in the mode than for a score of years, perhaps.

This duffel bag of Dame Fashion's comes with a "zip-zip-zip" as the song says. You see really these sausage-shaped bags of cloth with leather straps are not new inventions, except for this way of closing. When Dame Fashion was a girl of sixteen and went to boarding school she had such a bag made of linen cloth in an unbleached linen color with bindings of brown braid, and that one had to be buttoned up patiently, all along its length, as you would button a child's pinafore. Why, oh, how much it would hold! Taking it home for a week-end visit (only then everyone called it "stay over Sunday").

Dame Fashion has a vague memory of once carrying back in it to school a whole quilt, to aid in keeping comfortable in chilly New Hampshire nights. So this present duffel bag could easily take in an ample lingerie; two or three of the hats which are really happy if one folds them flat; all of the toilet needs necessary; a nice party dress which folding would not hurt; a dark silk kimono of light weight, and an extra dress of knit Jersey, also sure not to wrinkle.

Some may tell Dame Fashion that she ought to call her bag "huffie," as the sailors do, but good old Nonie Webster puts "duffel" away down to a supplement, and declares that "duffel" came originally from a town near Antwerp, where heavy wool cloth is made, suitable for such bags. He also declares that the word is "colloquial U. S. for kit, outfit or supplies," so you see it is quite the appropriate "kit-bag" in which to "pack up your troubles" and take to the vacation road. With a good umbrella, toe rubbers and a light weight "duffel" in the duffel, any weather could be faced, around the world.

And wherever you start for, and whatever the dress and hat fashions of the time, two ingredients of the duffel bag's filling must never change: a few stamped envelopes with sheets of paper on which to keep your next of kin posted on your travels, and a few cakes of sweet chocolate, to save the "holter feelin'" when a dining car or luncheon stop happens to be late.

Oddly enough, the traveling fashion for a duffel bag may be in vogue—though it is perfectly possible to find quite aristocratic ones in brown or black leather—but plaid is certainly not the travel-wear for human journeyers. Plaid has been declared this year that the reign of somber colors for traveling, gray, brown, black, and navy blue, is to be broken with galaxy of hues. But solid colors must be used and not figures. One may live in figured materials from morning to midnight in one's own habitat—but they are distinctly out of place in a railway station or on a steamboat wharf.

Camp Madonna Attracts Many Rochester Girls

Camp Madonna on Canandaigua Lake reached the peak of success during the past week, when every available accommodation had to be reserved for the hundreds of guests. Many guests registered for a short time this season but remained longer to enjoy the days filled with water and land sports and the delightful companionship of other girls. With counselors for every ten girls, under the recreation leadership of Miss Marie Abraham, each guest is assured of swimming and diving lessons and many have learned to swim while at camp. The camp is equipped for tennis, croquet, baseball, volley ball and thirty bar, and the evening hours are spent in social entertainments. Miss Anna Dodge is Camp Director, and the Camp counselors are: Mrs. Vincent P. Ladd, the Misses Jean Lohme, Jean Hayward and Dorothy Oenbrug.

Guests registered last week include: Irma Fessmer, Marion Tredy, Florence Kierins, Florence and Evelyn Sauers, Lillian Steimer, Marion O'Neill, Loretta Werner, Anna Mazurjits, Helen Kennedy, Gertrude Collins, Mrs. Elizabeth Brewer, Ruth Brewer, Mrs. F. McNeill, Mrs. Margaret Ritt, Madona Dolan, Mrs. Mary Pines, Margaret Aird, Helen Smith, Dolla and Lucille Forie, Conetta Teddy, Mrs. W. Wegman, Pauline and Lillian Amarandos, Viola Bednarz, Betty Collins.

The committee of the club in charge of its administration is composed of Mrs. John Fessler, chairman; Mrs. Frank T. Curtis, Mrs. Wendell E. Andrews, Mrs. P. D. Kane, Mrs. M. H. Keogh, Mrs. E. J. Ronney, Mrs. Louis A. Whalen and Miss Cecilia M. Yawman.

High Born Chinese Becomes Carmelite

Paris, Aug. 22.—Word has been received from Hanoi that the grand-niece of the Viceroy of Cochinchina has taken the veil at the Carmelite convent here.

Although a Buddhist, the viceroy has always been favorably disposed towards the Catholic religion because of the services rendered King Gen Long by Msgr. Pignone de Behnke, Apostolic Vicar of Indo-China, and because of his admiration for the work of Christian missionaries.
