Alfred E. Smith's Autobiography Tells of Attacks On His Religion

so, the Florida delegation pushed him off his chair and would not let him sit with them until he returned to the McAdoo camp.

The Louisville, Ky., police showed a poisonous spirit towards him when he spoke in that city during the campaign.

Of his presidential campaign speech in Oklahoma, Mr. Smith says that there was considerable opposition to his mentioning religion but that after listening to both sides of the argument he concluded that "inasmuch as I had personal knowledge of the underhand attacks and the undercurrent of the whispering campaign that was being carried against me and my family and as I personally had knowledge of the scurrilous, blasphemous literature being circulated throughout the country against me and my people, I felt deep in my heart that I would be a coward and probably unfit to be President if I were to permit it to go forward unchecked."
