Big Truck Kills Catholic Catcher For The Phillies

Baltimore, Nov. 1.—Walter (Peck) Lerman, 25, Catholic big league ball player, died last week from injuries suffered when he was struck Monday by a department store truck. Lerman, who was given the last rites by the Rev. Louis O'Donnovan, pastor of St. Martin's Church here, was waiting for a street car when the truck, out of control after side-swiping an automobile, careened up onto the sidewalk, plowing him to a wall. He suffered a skull fracture and a broken arm and leg. The young ball player began his career ten years ago with St. Martin's Catholic Club, of Baltimore. When he was 17 he signed with the Baltimore Orioles, later being farmed out to the York, Pa., team of the New York-Pennsylvania League. Still later he played with New Haven of the Eastern League. In 1928 Lerman was signed by the Philadelphia Nationals, and caught for them two years. He played in 104 games this season, and batted .222.

Ex-Senator Wadsworth Opposes Federal Control Of Nation's Schools

(Continued from Page One) Explains Federal Plan "I venture these observations having in mind a movement which has been on foot for several years and which, if successful, would confer upon the Federal Government the power to influence in very important ways the schools in the several states. The proposal finds its expression in bills introduced in the Congress providing for the establishment of a Federal Department of Education headed by an official of Cabinet rank and providing further that the Federal Government shall extend financial aid to the school system of the several states.

"It is but another example of pressure for Federal aid in one direction or another and with which we have become so familiar in recent years. But in this instance the proposal is of special significance, and if carried to its logical conclusion, will affect the whole philosophy behind our school program and indeed reach some of the fundamentals of Government itself. I ask your serious consideration of this movement.

Urges Bar On Powers

"It may be urged that the Federal department of education would be allowed to go just so far and no farther, that it would confine its functions to merely advising and cooperating with the states in an interchange of views. I have to remark that if such a department once established stopped at this point, it would be the first instance of its kind in the history of our Federal government. It may be contended that I am overdrawing the picture, but when we examine still further the proposal now pending and find that it includes the extending of financial aid from the Federal Treasury to the school systems of the states, then we cannot fail to recognize the nucleus of a great power.

"It is inevitable that the Federal government before it pays its subsidies shall prescribe conditions precedent to that payment. That is not only inevitable, but it is plain common sense. Thus the Federal department will demand assurance that the money of the United States will be spent in educational activities approved by itself. Step by step it will set up standards which must be met by the states before the latter set their money. The methods of teaching, the nature and number of the course of study, the textbooks, the plant and equipment may all be standardized by Federal decree. Some of the states may complain and hang back in the harness, protesting that they know what is good for their children, but the pressure upon them to yield in order to enjoy the subsidy will in the long run, break down their resistance.

Control Loss Is Seen

"When they yield they will have lost control of their schools and will thereafter await meekly and with some trepidation the visit of the Federal Inspector. An Imperial school system would never attract to the school board of this city that high-minded, unselfish patriotic membership which commands so much respect for it today.

A Hedge-Police of Trouble

"It is not difficult to visualize Senators and members introducing bills providing in effect that Federal money shall not be contributed to a state in whose schools the Darwinian theory is explained or taught, in such a case the halls of Congress will ring with orations on Modernism versus Fundamentalism, and if the matter may be brought to an issue, we may find the Congress solemnly deciding that the schools of America shall teach one or the other doctrine. And in anticipation I can hear a certain Senator demanding that the teachers make it clear that the Pope is a menace. I can see earnest souls who insist that all of us should behave just as they want us to behave.

urking through their friends in Congress that the children in the schools be taught that total abstinence by compulsion is necessary for the salvation of the Republic and of the soul. We may anticipate acid discussions concerning the facts of American history as contained in the school textbooks, all to the end that the seductive and baneful influence of King George V be banished from the minds of our innocents. And here we may again see our Federal government to be plunged into war, say you not hear the demand that the language of the enemy be banished from the schools? This very folly was perpetrated in some of the states back in 1917, but thank heaven it stopped in those states and never reached the proportion of a national program. A friendly rivalry persists, comparisons are made—all in an atmosphere free from the control of higher power. Enterprise, imagination, vision, all are free to play their parts. The progressive and liberal may be heard. Freedom in teaching may be enjoyed and most important of all, the management of the school itself may be kept within earshot of the home. We may well endure to see forty-eight varieties of we may forgo a little of that cold efficiency we may even stumble a little bit and leave some illiterates in our wake, but let us not enclose the schools of America in the grip of a Federal straightjacket."

Black Monks To Build Monastery Aid Shrine At Newton, N. J.

Great Artist Presents "Vision" In Work Dedicated to "Little Flower"

NEWTON, N. J.—The Very Rev. Fr. Michael Heinelein, O.S.B., Prior of the Little Flower Monastery, conducted here by the Benedictine Fathers, announced plans recently for the erection of a new shrine church and novitiate. The above illustration is reproduced from a preliminary drawing prepared by the Benedictine Monasteries at Newton by one of America's great artists, a distinguished Catholic, whose name cannot be disclosed at this time. Father Michael would hint at his identity only by saying that the artist's works are on view in most of the world's museums, including the famous Luxembourg Gallery in Paris, where only a few of America's foremost painters and sculptors are represented. Not all of the buildings shown above are to be built at once. The present plans call for the simultaneous construction of the tower of the Priory Church and the Novitiate where Fathers who belong to the Benedictine Congregation of the Office will train American priest-candidates for the Foreign Missions. The present Little Flower Monastery, constructed less than thirty years ago by the monks, has been their labors to St. Elizabeth because of her Benedictine training and devotion to the Missions has been crowded beyond its capacity. The new buildings will rise on an elevation forming part of the farm belonging to the present monastery acreage, which was acquired by the Benedictine Fathers five years ago and which has since been turned into a self-supporting dairy farm. The stone for the buildings will be quarried on the grounds and, according to true Benedictine custom, a number of the Brothers who are skilled stone masons will cut and shape it with their own hands. For this reason the cost of building the new monastery with its Priory Church—the Little Flower Shrine—will be unusually low. Only $100,000 is needed at this time and Father Michael hopes that enough friends of the Benedictine Missions and clients of the Little Flower will send their offerings from all parts of the United States to enable the immediate consummation of the plans outlined by him. The Monastery is situated just outside of Newton on the State highway leading from Netcong to Dingman's Ferry and can be reached by automobile from New York, Newark, Trenton, Philadelphia, Wilkes-Barre and Scranton in less than three hours. The train journey on the Delaware Lackawanna & Western R. R. is still shorter. A Constant Novena to St. Therese is being conducted by the Benedictine Fathers at the Little Flower Monastery at Newton where petitions may be sent to the Very Rev. Fr. Michael Heinelein, O. S. B., Newton, N. J. Prior Michael will gladly mail to those requesting it an illustrated booklet entitled "Glimpses of Benedictine History and Why Father Michael Founded the Little Flower Monastery at Newton, N. J."

William Mounhan of Rochester, called on friends here Saturday.

A group of future missionaries spite of the fact that stables, barns and other farm buildings have been pressed into service as class rooms. Additional space must be provided, lest many promising young men must be turned away, which would mean not only serious loss to Christ's cause on earth but also a heavy responsibility on those who fail to help. However, wholehearted assistance rendered missionary work affords a wonderful opportunity of proving to Him who died for us on the Cross, that we are willing and anxious to help in spreading His word among ALL nations.

The Contemplated Addition It was truly said that "He who helps missionary work does more than if he erected an altar and studied it with precious stones." The apostolic work of the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart is described in the little booklet, "The Call of the Sacred Heart." This booklet will be sent FREE to anyone applying to Rev. E. Giffenberger, Missionary of the Sacred Heart, 361 So. Lake Street, Aurora, Illinois. Don't fail to get your copy. The illustrations and maps will help you in visualizing the vastness of the task before the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart.
