difference that we enjoy in Protestantism, I am more and more impressed with the vast amount of agreement that we have achieved. In fact, 1 think "that the world is showing a steady atvance in its thought of God. It is also coming into an ever deeper appreciation of Christ's vision of human fellowship. It is caring for men more and more, as Christ cared for them. I believe that the testimony of history is to the effect that genuine truth can stand the process- of experimentation in many individual lives, which are way, which appeals to the liberal Protestant. Well, that all depends upon what salvation is. Salvation to me means the growth of the soul; particularly its growth in good will, by which it hay some time come into perfect accord with the will of God as revealed in Christ I do not believe that salvation of that kind need be missed by any man who purposes to do the will of God, according to his

"It may be said again that this point of view leaves Protestantism point of view mayes processmitters a rather ragged affair. It has a good many loose ends in thought and practice. Granted. Prot-estantism reminds me of Fisher Ames description of democracy. He said that monarchy was like a ship. She carried you in comfort as long as she was water tight, but put a hole in her side, and she sinks with all on board. Democra-cy on the other hand is like a raft. Your feet will always be in the water, but you cannot sink. I think of Protestant Christianity in much the same way. The vitancy of Protestantism is due to the fact that it combines individual freedom to discover religious truth in the process of living by it, with hospitality toward the truth discovered by other men and other churches. In the hymn book which I use on Sunday, there are hymns written by Catholics, Epis-copalians, Methodists, Congregationalists, Unitarians, Quakers and by members of many other re-ligious bodies besides the Presbyterians. I receive constantly, as an individual, inspiration from Catholic writers. I worship when occasion offers, without any hesita-tion with my Catholic brethren. Why of I do these things? Be-
