Father Dan's Advice for Boys and Girls

The Pursuit of Happiness

"Connie, when you are asked Bob Voigt, one of the pupils of St. Joseph's school, to meet his old brother Conway, carrying a heavy pack on his back, it was a school fellow who knew that the blunder was being a long time and a heavy pack on his back.
"Ask me no questions and I'll tell you no lies," was the best response.
"I suppose I'm too young to go with you?"
"Bob that he was only ten, while Conway was fifteen. Something was excluded by the older boy from their games for this very reason. And they always seemed to have more fun in their games than to with his playmates.
Thinking only of the quick way to escape Bob's questions and not knowing how deeply he was going to wound his brother, Conway answered lightly. "Of course, you're too young. Babies should stay at home."

Bob, to use his own words, was mad clear through. He quick temper was boiling the blood in his veins and making his temples throb.
"I'll get even with you, Connie Voigt," he shouted heedless of the fact that the older boy was already beyond hearing.
And I'll mow the lawn," he muttered to himself when the cow jumped over the moon.
Shortly Fearon, who was Bob's closest friend, had a mechanical turn of mind and a set of carpenter's tools, and was engaged in building for himself a fancy toboggan for the rapidly approaching winter.
No doubt you have seen these toboggans that curl up on the front end. Well, that's the kind Shorty was making with what all his father could obtain after his working hours.
Bob Voigt spent the forenoon with Shorty admiring the new sled and helping to finish it. He turned the great stone for Shorty, lifted the heavy boards and went down to the store to get some oil to put in the light which was too dry. He did not forget his resolve to "get even" with his brother. Every time he thought of it the blood boiled and the temples throbbed and poor Bob was "red hot."

He was in one of these "red hot" moods when he returned home from Shorty's and spotted Conway's pet meowing bird hanging in its cage in the warm sunshine. It was a no-account bird with a cracked voice that Conway had picked up in the hedge. Conway had always wanted a canary and he loved this poor, crippled creature more for what it represented than for what it was.
"Open the cage and let it out," was the wicked thought that came through Bobby's mind, and Bobby

Pope Receives Unusual Gifts From Visitors

Vatican City, Nov. 15.—Pope Pius receives many unusual gifts from visitors. A large number of these gifts are distributed by him to individuals and institutions in need of them. For instance, His Holiness recently directed that 20 sewing machines, presented to him at various times, be given to hospitals and other charitable institutions. The gifts were greatly appreciated.
