Diamond Jubilee Of Sisters of St. Joseph To Be Celebrated Sunday

celebration included the holding of a huge World's Fair in Chicago. To the Church of America, the Columbian celebration offered special advantages. Columbia was essentially her hero, and the discovery of this Western World was pre-eminently a Catholic enterprise. On October 12, Columbian exercises were held in all the schools of the country, both public and private. The parochial schools of Rochester did themselves proud on this occasion. The exercises in the Cathedral Hall were honored by the presence of Mayor Curran and a number of prominent Catholic and non-Catholic citizens of the city. The address for the occasion was delivered by William C. Barry.

The year 1833 also marked the 25th anniversary of the erection of the diocese of Rochester into an Episcopal See, and the Silver Jubilee of its first Ordinary, the Right Reverend Bernard J. McQuaid, D. D. On June 5 a general program in honor of the occasion was given in Cathedral Hall by the pupils of the parochial schools, at the close of which the Bishop addressed the children in touching words. At Nazareth Academy "The Silver Record" especially written for the event, was the chief feature of a very artistic program.

St. Bernard's Seminary Opened
But by far the most notable Diocesan event in a year of great achievements was the opening of St. Bernard's Seminary, which took place in July, although the formal dedication of the building was deferred to the feast of St. Bernard, August 19. To administer the household affairs, and direct the domestics employed in the Seminary, the Bishop asked that three Sisters be appointed. This was a new field of work entrusted to the community and the Sisters upon whom the responsibility devolved did their utmost faithfully to fulfill the important duties.

Early in October, 1833, the old asylum on Frank Street, where during half a century thousands of homeless children had been sheltered, was vacated, and the Sisters and children took up their abode in the new building on Clinton Street. Bishop McQuaid celebrated the first Mass in the chapel on October 14, but the formal opening of the asylum took place on Thanksgiving Day.

On November 17, of this same year, the Sisters and pupils of Nazareth were gathered in the Assembly Hall to welcome a distinguished guest, Monsignor Satoli, the first Apostolic Delegate to the United States. As he entered the hall, a chorus of fresh young voices sounded forth their greeting in the beautiful words of the "Vivat, Sacros Magnus". Monsignor Satoli responded in Italian, thanking the pupils for their cordial welcome, and commending them for the evidences of culture and refinement displayed in their little program of reception.

In the diocese of Rochester, from its very beginning a fountain-head of Catholic education, we find the source of some of the most important educational movements that have spread over the country during the past few decades. In the summer vacation of 1896 there was inaugurated in Rochester, under the direct supervision and patronage of Bishop McQuaid, the first Diocesan Conference for religious teachers ever held in the United States. At this first Diocesan Educational Conference, there were present about 750 religious from the teaching communities of the diocese, besides many secular teachers. 25 priests and several interested visitors. Several prominent speakers were on the platform. Father Halpin's talks on Christian Ethics were most instructive, while the lectures on English Literature by Professor Hiram Corson of Cornell, the noted Browning and Shakespearean scholar, were rare treats indeed.

Sisters Go To Elmira
The annation of the southern tier, comprising the four counties of Steuben, Chemung, Tioga, and Schuyler, to the diocese of Rochester was granted by a papal brief dated December 10, 1866. In September of 1897 the Sisters were sent to take charge of the school in St. Mary's parish, Elmira. The schools in Wayland and Perkinville had formerly been in charge of the School Sisters of Notre Dame and the Franciscan nuns. These Sisters now returned to Buffalo, and the schools were given over to the Sisters of St. Joseph.

At the annual meeting and banquet of the Nazareth Alumnae Association, held at Nazareth Academy on June 22, 1898, the exercises took the form of a jubilee celebration in honor of Bishop McQuaid's Golden Anniversary of ordination to the priesthood. The Bishop was present and delivered an address. In the course of his remarks the Bishop indulged in reminiscences of his early priestly labors in New Jersey, and spoke of the different occasions when he had addressed the students and teachers in the schools there. "There as here," he said, "I liked to see you ever so much when I wasn't talking." Concluding he said: "These priests bring the message of God's word to you. These Sisters, too, in much the same way, bring the same message to you. The power they exercise for good in the teaching of youth is almost incalculable."

Mother Hieronymo O'Brien
"SANTA WOMAN BRED" was the headline that appeared in the Rochester "Democrat and Chronicle" of the morning of February 1, 1898. This was followed by a lengthy sketch of the life of Mother Hieronymo O'Brien, who had been identified with charitable institutions in Rochester since 1857, in which year she opened St. Mary's Hospital. During the Civil War, under her direct supervision, 375 wounded soldiers were cared for in this institution. In 1870, Mother Hieronymo entered the order of the Sisters of St. Joseph, where her life for the next 25 years was spent in the promotion of various works of charity. At her passing, the whole city paid tribute to her memory, and resolutions of sympathy were adopted by the E. G. Marshal G. A. R. Post, and by the Rochester Historical Society.

Mother Agnes, in her wise foresight, had for some years been planning the erection of a normal school on the spacious grounds of Dewey Avenue. The work, which was commenced early in the spring of 1898, was completed towards the close of November, and the formal dedication of the building took place on December 27, the feast of St. John the Evangelist.

St. Ann's Home and Elmira Hospital
The first decade of the new century was to see the opening of St. Ann's Home for the Aged on Lake Avenue Boulevard, and the purchase of property in Elmira for hospital purposes. This was a new work for the Rochester Community, a work which has prospered beyond all expectation, as St. Joseph's Hospital in Elmira stands today one of the best equipped among the smaller hospitals of Western New York. During this time also convents were opened in several parishes of the city where the Sisters were teaching, thus relieving the crowded conditions at the Mother House on Jay Street.

Among the other larger events of this decade affecting the community were the consecration of Rt. Rev. Bishop Thomas I. Hecker on May 24, 1905, and the death of the Rt. Rev. Bishop McQuaid on January 19, 1909. In his parting words to Mother Agnes, the aged prelate blessed her and the community, bidding her not to worry over financial affairs, but to seek means to erect a more pretentious and comfortable building for a new Mother House. Sometimes it might have seemed in his dealings with the religious, as if he saw chiefly the community and scarcely the individual. But his outside friends know better, and his concern and inquiries for individual Sisters during the time of his illness.

"If" he's too old... FOR TOYS

HE'S growing up! A hundred little indications tell you so, and tell you, too, that he's growing up to style. His hair is combed more regularly—his shoes have a new-found shine—you notice that his tie is consistently straighter and his clothes more carefully brushed.

It's "taps" for the toy soldiers and time to give him practical gifts!

When he was a child, you gave him the toys of a child. You regret seeing him lose his childish ways, but you'll do your part to help him grow up as smartly dressed, typically American "little man."

Here, in a Store which closely studies boys' preferences, you'll find the kind of gifts he wants. Nor could you choose a more logical place to shop for him—for it's here that he'd come if you sent him to shop for himself.
