Brick Home of Dutch Colonial Design Attractive and Popular

A man's home is his mansion. This design leaves nothing to be desired, for it is complete, beautiful and practical. The floor-arrangement is ideal.

Flist Floor Plan.

ay W A RADFORD William A Radford will answer ons and give advice FREE OF toop on all subjects pertaining to practical home builting, for the readwide exp rience as editor, author and m infacturer, i.e., i.t at doubt, the highest authority on all these subhighest authority on an eness agree to Address all inquiries to William A Endford, No 447 south Dearborn Street (the 150 lil), a d only inclose two-cent stamp for reply

Brick is becoming a very popular building material in cities where there are restrictions on materials be cause of fire hazards, back is the ma terral most used for the reason that it is available in practically all sections of the country and can be laid up in many attractive designs.

The house shown in the accompany ing Illustration is of the Dutch colonial type and is constructed wholly of brick. However, for those who want a less costly method of construction, the house can be constructed of frame and the outside walls of brick veneer with some type of insulating board in between. This is a very popular type of construction in cities now and the result is that the owner has a very attractive substantial house at a cost less than that of a house of solid brick walls.

The illustration gives the idea that this is an unusually large home. However, it is only 24 feet deep and 30 feet wide. It contains six good size rooms besides the sun parlor adjoining the living room on the first floor ind the bathroom on the second floor. As in all colonial homes, the enfrance is in the center of the house and leads into a hall cut of which run the stairs to the second floor. In this the right. The living room is 11 feet by 22 feet: In the renter is no open fireplace on either side of which are french doors leading to the surroom, which is 8 feet by 18 feet. This arrangement adds considerably to the size and attractiveness of the living room. Owners who have homes with sunroom adjoining the living room say that the sunroom is the most attractive feature of the house and It is aed more than the living room when the family is alone.

The dining 100m is at the front and it if f et by 12 feet 9 inches. The k chen is large being 8 feet 6 inches by 13 feet. Off it at the rear is a breakfast room, & feet by 10 feet, which can also be reached through the dining room.

Upstairs there are three bedrooms each a corner room, and the bathtoom. The sizes of these rooms and their location in relation to the upstairs hall are shown in the floor

This is an unusually good design for a colonial type house. Its appearance is attractive and the brick makes it a substantial home. The balcony over the porch and breakfast room at one lesign the living room is at the left | and over the sunroom at the ind the dining room and kitchen at, other me good features, in the Price of Land We are in the habit of judging valnos of real estate by the general activity of the real estate market, building operations, building permits issued, acreage bought and sold, general bustness conditions and similar indicia But there are other important ways of gauging rising values.

The growth in population, transpor tation, utilities, industry, public improvements, etc., are some other fac tors which add to permanent real es tate values because they indicate demand, necessibility, comfort, buying power, progress, desirability and the like, to the prospective buyer.

We have only to imagine the sales resistance in marketing a piece of ufhan real estate without improved streets, without utilities like gas, electricity, water, sewers and telephones without factories or business nearby to create pay rolls; without rapid transportation to and from regular places of employment or business, and the importance of these factors in crealing and increasing values in real estate becomes self-evident.
