Church in China Must Fight To Strengthen and Hold Her Place In Grim Struggle For Existence

In Face of Years of Adversities Another Vicariate Has Been Created By Rome—Many Students For the Priesthood.

Vatican City, Sept. 5.—Abundant evidence flows in from China that Catholic missionary forces have dug in for a long and grim struggle. In face of years of adversities still another vicariate headed by a Bishop has been created by Rome, and placed in care of the Italian-Franciscans thus bringing the total ecclesiastical divisions in China to 99. This Vicariate, Hengchow, is separated from Changsha which has fallen to the Communists. No effort is being spared to maintain intact and, indeed, to drive doggedly forward the organization which the Church has set up from the Mongolian steppes to the borders of Indochina.

(Fides Service)
Strengthening societies in the neighborhood of Peking and in certain other sections of the country where the Church has reached a more advanced stage of organization, attention has been given to strengthening the Catholic societies among the Chinese and there has been a recruiting of all Catholics of influence that their assistance may be had against the enemies of Christianity who become more formidable.

An interesting insight into this question of a Catholic elite in positions of influence is provided by His Lordship Bishop Fourquet of Canton, who, on the one hand, pleads strongly for a careful preparation of every young Catholic of promise. On the other hand he warns Catholic authorities not to jeopardize the careers of Church members by asking them to render services which embarrass them in their positions; a long-headed regard for the future should be the statesmanlike policy.

Chinese Catholics Must Act
Chinese Catholics organized in societies must raise their voice for Catholic rights, declare the leaders, few and weak though these Chinese are for the moment may be Father De Jonghe, of the synodal Commission which under the Apostolic Delegate is assisting in studying the Church in China's great problems; "The future of Catholic schools is sombre, with a signalling of vexations on the part of the authorities almost everywhere. . . . The Catholic Action Association and the Catholic Youth Association are preparing to present their complaints to the government. It is to be noted that the Apostolic Delegate never lets slip an occasion to encourage and promote these associations which depend on the Synodal Commission."

An instance of results from Catholic action is reported from the Vicariate of Tientsin. The district of Tsing-Yan, entirely in charge of Chinese priests, has well organized schools which were attacked by local government authorities and threatened with closure. Clergy and people replied, with vigor, spoke out against the autocrats through the Catholic paper Ichouan, and appealed to Catholics, under other bishops of the province. Those of at least one other vicariate, that of the Chinese bishop of Ankuo, protested to provincial headquarters and it is reported that the freedom of Catholic schools has been upheld.

For the Priesthood
Striking is the report from the Fides representative at Hengchow, in the province of Honan, who says: "While in the world outside, during these recent years, cannon boom and all is in disorder, in our seminary, transferred deep into the country, silence and perfect calm reign, and the preparation goes on of the laborers of tomorrow, who, even without us, will be able to continue the work which has been so well begun here."

China counts 73 major seminaries, with 756 candidates in preparation, while over 4,000 younger men study in junior seminaries. All, however, are not in complete calm. The new central seminary at Kiangsi, in
