

Chaplain of Institutions Makes An Appeal For Rosaries And Prayer Books For Inmates

The Rev. Eugene N. Golding Asks For Donations of Large Number of Religious Articles For Needy Poor and Aged People.

The following letter came to the Catholic Courier and Journal this week, and it carries an appeal that surely will find a warm place in the hearts of many charitable people. An appeal that should, and undoubtedly will, be answered generously and quickly:

"Rochester State Hospital, Monroe Co. Penitentiary, Monroe Co. Almshouse, Monroe Co. Hospital, Iola Sanatorium, Feb. 13, 1931.

"Dear Editor: "Am writing to know if you will express through the columns of your paper this request. We have need during the year for over two hundred pocket manual prayer books and rosaries in order that the inmates of the above institutions may not be without the bare necessities of material help for their spiritual welfare. These articles may be purchased for a reasonable amount, if considered in wholesale quantities. I take this opportunity of extending a note of appreciation to my many friends who in this regard have been so generous and unselfish in the past year.

"Many of us have been blessed with the bloom of health, strong will and the means of sustenance. Perhaps many of us shall never reach the years of old age or realize what it means to recline on public charity for bread and butter.

"The inmates in the State Hospital or in the Penitentiary has many an hour to spend with the beads and the book of prayer. The convalescent in Iola Sanatorium knows only too well the meaning of long, long days. The aged and the forsaken in the poorhouse place their final recourse in the hope that prayer shall remove their burden.

"God in His Mercy has been kind to us, if we care to make comparisons. The Blessed Master has spared us many a humble affliction. In our charity shall we forget those on whom fortune has but sadly smiled? "In these institutions there are several altars dedicated to the memory of the Little Flower. No one shall ever know how earnestly this Saint of the Most High has been implored here in our midst to send in her promised shower of roses a favor to these trusting servants who once were near and dear to some kin.

"The expression of selfless devotion and the acts of self-denial are appropriate for this season of the year. In consideration of our fellow brethren I have called your attention to the above.

"Again thanking you for past favors, I am

"Sincerely,
"Rev. E. N. Golding, Chaplain.

Dame Fashion Smiles

By Grace Jewett Austin

Once upon a time—and this is not a fairy tale—there lived and still lives at the age of eighty-four, a wonderful woman who largely through her ability and energy gained immense wealth through manufacturing a household article. On her recent birthday anniversary the reporters went to see her, to get a summary of her life history. In the course of it they asked her, "Mrs. B., what are the most valuable assets for a woman?" "Courtesy, clothes and youth—or at least, the illusion of youth," was her first answer—and then:

Grace J. Austin.

"Clothes are more and more an asset to a woman," she said. "You may have brains, but you must have clothes and a prepossessing appearance to put yourself over." That testimony from a woman of her age, ability, philanthropic habit of mind and cosmopolitanism from round the world travel seems to Dame Fashion an especially powerful support of the good clothes theory.

From the narrowest of "one-way streets" to the widest of the boulevards there can never be but a "two-way" street for vehicles. But the clever designers are all the time trying to find costumes that may be worn in varied ways and for widely differing purposes. Lately Dame Fashion heard a woman from another city give an address before a club of women. She wore an effective blue velvet jacket ensemble, with quite a low-cut neck. Some one sitting by whispered, "Now, if she takes off the jacket, will it be a formal gown?" No woman could tell with positiveness, unless the jacket had been removed, but it was not at all unlikely. This possibility of chameleon changes in form is the secret of the established value of the ensemble.

According to a friend's account, at one of the large coed universities, girls have planned "five-way" dresses. The rule for such a dress is to begin with a dress of black crepe or rather heavy weight; make it with tailored lines, a narrow belt at the natural waistline, and an eight-inch pleating around the bottom. Then make a circular apron of the silk, and border it with some more pleated ruffling. This around the shoulders and gain a cape costume; tie it around the waist, will appear in the back; add a deep crew lace collar and lace cuffs, for dress four—and then by making a little eon jacket, dress five is ready.

They tell Dame Fashion that many crepes and printed silk dresses will be worn, often with a small bright figure on a dark ground. The popular satin dresses, with touches of bows or duffed ruffles of the goods, pieced-edged, can almost turn an ashmudgion's garb into that of a Princess Cinderella.

Every once in awhile, just to refresh her spirit, Dame Fashion goes to look at the sensible and pretty clothes that are provided for little children in these days. The people who have planned them have not forgotten what a real child is like. And to the on-looker's amusement, they are even making "laughing cups" in these days, so that the cross child refusing his milk will be tempted by a cup that is one broad smile.

Cape Models Are Chic for Spring

Array of Winsome Suits in Fashion Picture for Milady's Wear.

It is a suit season, asserts a fashion correspondent in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Leading the fashions for spring are an array of stunning suits. Herewith are some of the features of these new suits which mark them different:

The jackets are nipped in and have fitted seams.

A small cape swings from the shoulders.

Sharkskin, like the sultry worn by men, now takes its place as a material for women's clothes.

Some of the new suits have pep-lums on the skirt or are fitted at the high waistline so as to give a pepium effect on the jacket.

The softest, frailest blouses, tucked in, are worn underneath.

The junior tailor features bright red covert cloth.

The young miss prefers the shoulder cape suit which looks very "swagger."

Madame wears one of the severe tailcoats with the collarless neckline and a pepium.

The town tweed suit is most frequently of some bright shade.

But sharkskin styling is predominantly to be found in the mannish two-piece suit with the down-the-back coat and matching shoulder-cape model in blue or blue wool crepe and worn with a pique blouse.

Almost all of these skirts are quite long in skirt length, at least four inches below the knees.

The foremost designers have turned their attention to perfecting the enchanting blouses which are worn with the new suits.

Lynvin introduced a blouse with a side neckline, tied in a bow; other little bows adorned this blouse "here and there."

Augusta Bernard featured in the spring openings a crepe blouse which has bits of shirring on it and a frilled neckline. From London comes the shirtwaist blouse, smartly tailored and tucked in front like a man's-tuxedo shirt.

Chanel displayed great originality by designing a pepium blouse which is belted at the high waistline and has tiny appliqued bows down the front.

The scalloped bob blouses with shirring are distinctly the creation of Patou.

There are two types of suits, really. There is the mannish, tailored suit and the "dressmaker" suit. The latter, which is the ultra-feminine style, requires the frilly, fancier blouse.

With these suits are worn the new popular cuban heel shoes for informal wear or a pair of the smart new oxfords with dainty high heels.

Flat envelope purses seem to complete the ensemble idea with these suits. As soon as top coats can comfortably be discarded, the always flattering fox scarf will once more adorn the shoulders.

A bright-colored, large-sized handkerchief flowing out of the jacket pocket will not be amiss.

The spring felts and straws, too, sport new ideas. Although the daytime hats have brims, they are worn off the face so as to expose the eyebrows. They are very smart.

Old-Fashioned Cottons for Spring and Summer

Whether it is the result of the return of demure fashions or not, the fact remains that cottons, good old-fashioned cottons, have returned for spring and summer. Voiles, organzas, dotted swiss, dimities, the cottons that used to make our best summer frocks when we were very young are now illustrating that even fashion history repeats itself. But the fabrics are changed a bit from the days of our youth. Voiles appear in solid prints and unusual color combinations. Muslin is stiffened and printed with gay blossoms. Cotton net is an important fabric in the summer mode.

New Colors
Reds come with an orange tone or are very clear and vivid, and the next popular color for novelty is blue, especially baby blue.

The coat shows horizontal workings of the fur on the skirt, while merlot fur in a brown shade, forms the lengthened collar line. A brown and beige hat blends with the coat, as do the brown slippers and dress worn beneath.
