1831-Rochester's Oldest Financial Institution-1934

JONATHAN CHILD

On June 10, 1834, three thousand people crowded onto Brown's Island, located between Brown's Race and the Genesee River, to witness the inauguration of Rochester's first mayor, Jonathan Child.

In response to the toast, "The City having lost its father, (Colonel Rochester) seeks protection in the elder Child," he voiced a fine ideal for the citizens, saying, "In all the intercourse of social life and on all occasions.

let us ... seek only the public good."... Besides being Rochester's first mayor, Jonathan Child was one of the three men who founded the Rochester Savings Bank in 1831, three years before Rochester became a city. For 103 years this Bank has helped the citizens of this community to obtain financial security. As our city enters its second century, and the whole country faces a new era of confidence and prosperity, we invite you to open an account with us.
