

RADIO REPAIRS
Best repair service in the city on all makes of home radios and auto radios. Modern equipment, rapid repairs and reasonable rates. Phone 2000 sets called for and delivered at no extra charge.
HICKSON'S
1401 Our New Home
Cor. Main and Franklin, Stone 93

CALVERTS GAVE WORLD EXAMPLE FOR QUENCHING INTOLERANCE

(Continued from Page 1)
... to destroy them, and these... afterwards able to dis...
... at last the Chesapeake... whose beauty and abundance... eloquently described by Father... Andrew White, who chronicled the... voyage: the sail up the glorious Po... toment River, the landing at St... Clement's Island, and finally, March... 25, three hundred years ago told

... who, was the least of the... when they landed in Maryland... R. Bennett Darnall, chairman of... the executive committee of the Mary... land Tercentennial Commission, a... prominent Catholic of Baltimore... who traces relationship back to... Archbishop John Carroll, opened... the meeting with a brief address in... which he emphasized that while it... was probable the Maryland Pilgrims... cruised about in the waters of the... Potomac and the Chesapeake... before they landed, it was their idea... and determination to found the col... ony and the Feast of the Annun... ciation and say Mass, on Maryland... soil for the first time on that day... a day which would bring a message... of hope to the citizens of the New... Land.

GOV. RITCHIE LAUDS CALVERTS FOR TOLERANCE AT MARYLAND CEREMONY

(Continued from Page 1)
... that Father White, and his... and principal purpose is this: that... in a land so fertile, there may be... sown merely the seeds of grain and... of fruit but rather, the seeds of re... ligious and devotion. Our purpose... is nobler than any which England... for all the rich record of her vic... torious, has ever yet achieved. I call... it a Splendid Venture, this garner... ing of souls, for such was the work... of Christ, the King of Glory.

... We recall the principles of politi... cal and ecclesiastical freedom, so... farfetchedly proclaimed by the Free... men of this Colony: "The inhabitants... shall have all their rights and lib... erties according to the great Char... ter of England... Holy Church, within this Province, shall have all... her rights, liberties and immunities... safe, whole and inviolable, in all... things."
... We recall the declaration of spiri... tual independence, made by the... Military Commander of the In... fant Colony: "Your Lordship knows... that my security of conscience was... the first condition that I expected... from this Government."

Americans strike, 219,000,000 matches daily — and that may explain two-pants suits.
Misses — "Our radio is static tonight. Williams, call statistician and have him fix it."

Easter Fashion
In silk and wool... Colors—navy, black, and brown.
LIKLY'S
MAINE
As durable as beautiful... correct with all but the most formal apparel.
$3

EASTER GREETINGS
MEET YOUR FRIENDS
SAGAMORE ROOF SUPPER DANCE
SATURDAY NIGHTS
10:30 TO CLOSING
FRANK J. SKULTETY
AND HIS ORCHESTRA
Minimum Check $1.00 Per Person
SAGAMORE HOTEL East Ave.

"Nothing in all history so thrills the heart of man as the lives and fate of those who risked their all for the sake of a profound conviction. These are of the noblest works of God, and George Calvert was one of them. It was his dreaming, his thinking, his will that planned this voyage, and I like to think that it was his spirit, guided from on high, which gave the fortitude and the courage to overcome its perils and its dangers."
Risked Material Things
"A character rare and unblemished, justifying and enjoying the esteem of his fellow countrymen, with power and influence and high office already won and further profect in sure prospect, he risked all these material things, and dared prosecution that he might embrace the faith which with his heart and his soul he believed."
... Under the Maryland Charter which King Charles I assured him, George Calvert intended to establish across the seas a haven for his Catholic co-religionists from the intolerance which beset them at home. This idea seems not to have been original with him. Others had conceived it before. But George Calvert went further. He sought to accomplish the idea by means of an ideal, a very practical one, it is true, but a great ideal none the less. He beheld a vision, and he made of it a reality.

"We recall, with gratitude to Thee and them, that priceless heritage of Principles and Purposes; which those Founders of this State have left us, in the written records of their words and deeds."
... We recall the primary of spiritual purpose, openly acknowledged... of another Governor.
... Later on the Catholics, who through the Calverts had been instrumental in establishing religious freedom, were themselves to feel the heavy hand of persecution and intolerance because of their faith.
... Nevertheless it is eternally true that Maryland is the home of religious freedom. The Calvert founders brought it here and established it here, and here it lived unchallenged as long as their power remained. Roger Williams "cannot receive the credit, because Rhode Island, albeit with a counter liberal in its terms, did not welcome or harbor as citizens either Catholics or Jews."
... The Calverts welcomed and harbored all, both in religious and in political faith. They gave to the world the vision and the example which, once implanted in the human heart, will quench the dangerous consequences of religious antagonism and prejudice, whose embers and scalding fires un happily still abound.
... Today, in the reverence of this sacred place, I venture the hope that the future of our State may inherit that which was sublime in the sanctuary of our past, that there may be for us a reedication to the simple and liberal faith of the Calvert fathers, that we may have a warmer brotherhood, more sympathy and more understanding among men, a stronger will to reconcile our disputes and differences; and may there be also a renewed reverence and a reawakened tolerance for the right of each one of us to worship the God of his own free faith in accord with the dictates of his own free conscience.
... These are Maryland heritages, and it is in the spirit of them that, as Governor of and on behalf of the State of Maryland, I officially accept this Cross as a symbol of the deathless Past, and as a living inspiration for future Hope and Promise, mutual Tolerance and Brotherly Love."

"Perhaps this was not strange, even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

LAUER'S OFFER TO BRIDES
of the month of April —
PIECES IN AMERICAN WALNUT
$119
With the purchase of this suite, Lauer's will give absolutely free any gift of $10 value in our store. This to bride only. And you must mention the ad in the Courier.
LAUER'S

Easter Means Beautiful Flowers for HER...
And she'll compliment your choice if that precious Easter corsage comes from Keller's... for this florist of 59 years' experience knows what's fashionable in flowers. And Keller's prices will please you as much as Keller's flowers will please her.
Corsages $1.50 up
Roses, Violets, Sweet Peas, Lily-of-the-Valley, Also Beautiful Orchid and Gardenia Corsage.
Easter Lilies $1.50 Other (plants) up to $1.00
Azalias, Rambler roses, tulips, hydrangeas, and combinations of Spring flowers.
Beautiful Plant Arrangements in Pottery
J. B. KELLER Sons, Inc.
25 Clinton Ave. N. Stone 484
Keller's Telegraph Flowers Anywhere!

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

Odenbach Candy for Easter
Chocolate and bonbons—delicious and tempting—made fresh in our own candy kitchen, and ESPECIALLY PACKED FOR EASTER GIFTS, at no increase in price 70c lb.
Gigantic Easter Basket Display
Bring the children to see this wonderful revolving display of mammoth Easter eggs and bunnies.
Chocolate bunnies, peeps and cream-filled eggs, jelly beans, baskets and other Easter novelties. Candy that is pure and good for the children.
Mail Orders Given Prompt Attention.
Odenbach COFFEE SHOPPE
CLINTON AND MAIN

KEEP FOODS S-A-F-E
We have great confidence in all of the four refrigerators we sell. Our Engineers have tested and tried them out in our laboratories and are satisfied that any one of them will give you entire satisfaction.
This is the time of year when the matter of proper refrigeration must be considered. Don't take chances with the family foods. KNOW that at all times they are properly maintained at SAFE TEMPERATURES.
We sell the General Electric, Frigidaire, Jewett and the Electrolux (gas) refrigerator.
Convenient Terms
RGE
AND ELECTRIC

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

For HEALTH and ENERGY
a Quart of PURE MILK
Every Day CALL ONE OF THESE RELIABLE DAIRIES
The high cream content, the perfect pasteurization and sanitary handling of milk from these dairies make it the logical choice for children. It's best because it's purest.
DECKER'S DAIRY
454 Thurston Road - GENESEE 3658
GARNHAM DAIRY
Premium Dairy Products 80 Finch Street - GLENWOOD 5638
GENTLE DAIRY
21 Bowman Street - CULVER 2115
KORT'S DAIRY PRODUCTS
Branch of Dairymen's League Co-operative Association, Inc. 15-43 Henrietta Street - MONROE 674
KUNZER-ELLINWOOD
123 Barbary Terrace - STONE 2958
LAKE VIEW DAIRY CO.
147 Argo Park - GLENWOOD 1161
C. M. PHILLIPS
47 Seward Street - GENESEE 487
REPP'S DAIRY
495 Portland Avenue - STONE 2157
SCHULTZ DAIRY
31 Marie Street - STONE 5174
AVON DAIRIES, INC.
44 Main Street - MONROE 1122

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could not officially proclaim a government in which Church and State were to be separate, and the Church of England not supreme ecclesiastically.
... The proof is found in the background of George Calvert's life, his associates and his training, in his and Cecil's confidential discussions with prospective colonists and in their plans for the Province, and more specifically in Cecil Calvert's instructions to the Commissioners of the Province when they embarked, and in proclamations issued by Leonard Calvert as Governor of the Province.
... Proof is found, too, in the fact that so long as the Calverts ruled Maryland there is no single record of the prosecution of any individual because of his religious faith and practices, while there are indisputable records of the prosecution of those who undertook to deny the right of others to assert any exercise in their own way their own religious convictions.
No Jews Prosecuted
"It may be added that in this Province then governed by Catholics, those who were tried for violating Calvert's instructions for religious freedom were not Protestants, but were Catholics who had denied Protestants the right to assert their Protestant faith, and although it is not disputed that there were Jews in the Province from the earliest days, there is no instance of the exclusion or the prosecution of any Jew so long as the Calverts were in power.
... It is true the time was to come when this religious freedom which was established and practiced under the Calverts was to exist no more.
... Contrary to the popular conception, the Act of Toleration of 1649 was not the beginning of religious freedom in Maryland. This Act, although far ahead of the time else where, was in reality the first break in religious freedom in Maryland, because it excluded non-Christians from its protection, and thus limited the complete religious freedom which existed under the Calverts. But this was due to the influence and growing power of a new element in the Province, after Leonard Calvert's death and the appoint-

... even in that day of bigotry and oppression. For one whose character was as gentle as charitable and as tolerant, and who had the simple faith reflected in these passages, he wrote the Earl of Stratford a few months before his death.
... "But all things, my Lord, in this World pass away; wife, children, honor, wealth, friends, and what else is dear to flesh and blood, they are lent us till God please to call them back again, that we may not esteem anything our own, or set our hearts upon anything but Him alone, who only remains forever."
... So George Calvert conceived and determined to post his children, the idea that the way to religious tolerance for one's own beliefs is to grant tolerance to the beliefs of others, and so make of his province Maryland a place where peoples of all beliefs and all creeds might worship in peace and in harmony.
Son Inherited Conception
This conception was inherited by George's son, Cecil, who, after his father's death, actually received the Charter, and it was but his practical effect by Cecil's brother, Leonard, the first Governor of the Province.
... Time does not permit a recital of the proof that the Calverts intended complete religious freedom for the people of Maryland. The proof is not clearly found in the Charter of Maryland, because England could