BOOKKEEPER-ACCOUNTANT-CONTROLLER GENERAL MANAGER

= by Ernest W. Veigel, Ir. . President of Rochester Business Institute

In Dicken's Christmas Carol we have the picture of a man stooped over a high desk with a quill pen in hand. His clothes are cheap, his manner is that of a slave. Such was the bookkeeper of the early 19th Century.

What a change, today. Electrically controlled machines do the work of many pen operators of yester-day. Bookkeeping no longer concerns itself only with records of purchases and sales. Business has become greedy for sales totals, production reports, records on over head and turnover.

Even personnel on the lowest rounds of the "bookkeeping ladder" today need a broad general nowledge of business in order to function efficiently. Better business schools recognize this fact. I believe it would be a revelation to most men and women to see, for example, the list of topics embraced in the Pace and Pace system of accounting. This includes not only bookkeeping procedure but a study of corporations, finance, transportation, chain and department stores as well as taxation and legal considerations.

It is no wonder that accounting is today considered one of the most logical stepping stones possible to real busiless success. The foundation offered by accredited commercial schools is such that young men (and young women, also) may step from bookkeeping to accountant, to auditor or controller, and then to general manager of important business organizations.

At Rochester Business Institute the Pace and Pace accounting system is leatured. The record of those who have graduated from this course, even during recent years, is enviable. Future opportunities will bear still. greater promise. Government regulations of business through NRA calling for facts and figures in addition to income tax reports, will bring the position of "bookkeeper" even greater recognition.

To any young man who finds figures to his liking and who choses at this time to select the field of accounting as a career. I wish to say: "Congratulations 1"-Adv.

The First Balloon Ascension

In 1836 citizens of Rochester witnessed what at that time was a miracle.

There was held in Rochester in that year the first balloon ascension. It was engineered by a Frenchman named Lauriatt. It took place in what was then a vacant lot, the corner of State and Railroad Streets, now State and Central Avenue, the present site of the Savoy Hotel. Hydrogen gas was used, made from

The ascension was considered a great success, and brought to Rochester hundreds of visitors from surrounding territory.

When this first balloon ascension was made, the Rochester Savings Bank was already an institution of high standing, having served since 1831. It's family of depositors was growing rapidly.
