R. B. I. History Goes Back To Days of Civil War in U. S.

Rochester Business Institute, now one of the largest commercial educational institutions in the United States, was founded in 1863. The early school was located in a building on Main Street West. In 1875, the Rochester Business University (its name then) went to new quarters in the old Masonic Building, the site of the Wilder Building at the present time.

Louis L. Williams, the earliest known director of the school, was joined in 1875 by Fernando E. Rogers. In 1896, the Rochester Business Institute became the Rochester Business University. At this time teacher training became a regular department. From the early 1900's the R. B. I. has consistently grown and progressed. Occupying its own building, put up under the regime of S. C. Williams, Dr. John F. Forbes and Dr. F. G. Nichols, (now Director Graduate School of Education, Harvard University), the R. B. I. has steadfastly clung to its fine standards of the best in commercial education.

The school of today features specialized business education, realizing that education is not preparation for life, but life itself. The broadening growth of business calls for a larger training that will not fail under any circumstances of life in the business world.

The Rochester Business Institute is now the third largest organization in the private business education field. Its 50,000 or more graduates are exemplifying their training in many of the high places of the world—foreign embassies, general administrative offices of concerns of world renown and leadership, universities and colleges, the Supreme Court bench, in the management of large businesses, to say nothing of those attaining their local growth.

Under the presidency of Ernest W. Veigel, Jr., the Institute owns a resolve to continue its leadership by anticipating by eight to ten years the type of business training demanded by any given period. The total enrollment of its Day and Evening Schools is upwards of 800. An affiliated school is in Syracuse, the Central City Business Institute, and branch schools at Batavia and Oswego.

Catholic Booth At Centennial Expo Attracts Crowds

Development of Catholicity in the city of Rochester from humble beginnings to the present splendid condition is portrayed in the Catholic Booth at the Rochester Centennial Exposition.

Graphically the growth is symbolized by the contrast between the large view of St. Patrick's Cathedral of today and the Church of St. Patrick which occupied the same site one hundred years ago. In 1834 St. Patrick's was not a cathedral church, but only a parish church subject to the Diocese of New York. When the Diocese of Albany was established, St. Patrick's was part of the new diocese; later it was subject to the Diocese of Buffalo, and in 1868 on the establishment by the Holy Father of the Diocese of Rochester it became the Cathedral Church of this diocese.

In 1834 St. Patrick's was one of the two churches that served the Catholics of Rochester, parishioners in both parishes numbering perhaps less than 1,000. In 1934, St. Patrick's Cathedral is the principal church among forty-three in the city, parishioners numbering over 140,000 in these forty-three parishes. To serve this great group of people, the Catholic Church in Rochester has not only the churches, but 35 parochial schools for grammar school pupils, two business schools, four high schools, two colleges, two seminaries, one hospital, three orphan asylums, one home for the aged, one boarding home for girls and young women, one school and home for young girls, two private grammar schools, three settlement houses for social service, one city-wide social center for men, women and children, and one incorporated society for the care of the poor.

The stately lines of the Cathedral are brought out in a masterly way by the artist who has arranged lighting conditions to portray clearly the beauty of architecture which it exemplifies. The present Cathedral dates back to 1898, but includes portions of the older structure. The spire pointing high into the heavens is indicative of the dedication of the church and of its members to the Kingdom of God, as also of the fact that the orderly growth and progress during the century of the Catholic Church in Rochester is due to the zeal and faith of a devoted clergy and the loyal cooperation of a consecrated laity, all working together for the Holy Church which they love.

The setting of the booth serves to bring out the beauty of the exhibit on a blue field high over the curving lines in which the picture is gracefully framed, is the word "Catholicism" in silver letters: this part of the booth is in keeping with the booths on either side, one for the people of Jewish faith marked "Judaism", and the other for the members of the Protestant churches marked "Protestantism". One hundred years of religious history in Rochester has taught the members of the various groups how to live together in brotherly love based on mutual esteem one for another.

Pictures of the larger churches are arranged on the side walls of the booth. Legends in the upper part of the frame surrounding the Cathedral tell of the leaders of the diocese, while in the part below some of the significant dates and personages of its history are given.

The booth is cared for by members of the Catholic Women's Club who are ready to explain the meaning of the various parts of the display to visitors. Carl Lewenguth in collaboration with Elmer Lapp prepared the plans for the exhibit and put them into execution.

Religion Suppressed In Russia, Declares Observator Writer

Vatican City.—The final installment of a series of articles, "A Journey into the Soviet Union," written for the Observator Romano by A. M. Seers, draws certain conclusions regarding present-day life in Russia. "As to religion," the article states, "the Government of the Kremlin remains as it has always been—militantly and persecutingly atheistic. Religion is officially suppressed, and by Bolshevik materialism, God has been replaced by the machine, a fact that has brought unrest and death to the soul."

"Although in Russia one prattles of freedom of worship, in reality there is no such thing. We have before us an avowed and monstrous work of liberty, but it is true that the Soviet Government has no fear of its return. Religion is officially suppressed, but religious sentiment, dogmas and sacraments in the soul, nevertheless like a vital lymph ready to explode at any time."

Portrait of a (worried) LADY (whose husband is careless about his insurance...)

She would NOT worry...

IF AUTOMOBILE accidents were not so numerous these days... what with speedier cars, smoother roads, and heavier traffic. She knows all too well that no one is safe from accidents.

IF HER HUSBAND were to secure the proper insurance coverage so that, in the event of some unforeseen accident, he and his loved ones would be shielded from direct losses or from suits growing out of claims for damages.

IF HER HUSBAND would check his insurance needs now, and then buy standard insurance for maximum protection. You, too, may well heed this reminder to secure proper insurance protection. Check! And then...
