COLLEGE— and a Business Degree!

by Ernest W. Veigl, Jr.

President, Rochester Business Institute

The picture of the young graduate, successful at college, but a dismal failure at practical affairs of the world, is proverbial.

In some cases even before entering college young men see the wisdom of studying shorthand in order to better take down lecture notes.

Business is no longer inimical to an A. B. degree. Employers in a great many instances definitely prefer college men and women for positions providing (and this is important) that by experience or otherwise these individuals have demonstrated their ability in practical affairs.

This last point was brought home to me forcibly last week. No less than eight young men, all college graduates, either called me on the phone or came to my office asking advice.

The "hard finish" of business training is a mighty desirable factor no matter what field of life a young man or young woman may wish to enter.

I might mention here that one of the most coveted degrees in this country today is a degree in business.

My final advice to young people is this: Somewhere along the line of your education be sure to acquire a thorough business training—the earlier the better.—(Advertisement).

Lighting School Planned By Gas and Electric Co.

(Continued from Last Week) New Science of Seeing will be discussed during a four-day course of study in scientific new principles of illumination to be conducted for a selected group of engineers and service workers of Rochester Gas & Electric Corporation, September 17 to 20.

As the Science of Seeing points out, the tasks for which we use our eyes cannot be changed appreciably. To a great degree they are prescribed for us; for the child who has his schoolroom routine, to the grown person who reads or sews or otherwise does close visual work most of the day.

The new Science of Seeing is the result of more than twenty years' continuous laboratory research, and embodies millions of tests and observations. Based on the promise that seeing is a partnership of lighting and vision, it aims toward a proper understanding of eye usage and the provision of lighting best suited to various seeing conditions.

Catholic Evidence

When A Loved One Passes On...

Gently the doctor replaced the wrist of the woman on the white bedspread. Sympathetically, he turned to the kneeling man and said: "Your wife, Mr. Jones—your wife has left us."

Head: Impossible. The one person who really meant anything to him—gone forever! Nothing more could he do for her, and before him stretched wretched, lonely years.

What a comfort for the Catholic, at such a time, to know that he still can aid—that by his prayers to the compassionate Lord, Jesus, he can help wipe out her tiny sins and the temporal punishment to all her forgiven sins—and that she, by her prayers for him, may help him toward his heavenly goal.

Such is the dogma of Purgatory, and it's all so logical. Surely nothing defiled can enter into the purity of Heaven; and by the same token, nothing but the grossest filth, unrepented, deserves the everlasting punishment of hell fire. Therefore, there must be a midway place of punishment and of cleansing, that almost all of us enter to stay until we are fit to reside with Jesus in Heaven.

This the Apostle preached and practiced. This the early Fathers taught and wrote. This the Bible in many places presupposes in such a way that no man with an open mind can doubt the meaning. Of this the catechisms give living testimony today.

If you want these proofs and biblical texts—if you want information on any Catholic subject—it will be supplied, gladly if you ask us. Catholic Information Society of New York, N. Y.

Good Judgment vs. Sentimentality. WHEN DEATH claims a loved one, it is not always easy to think calmly and to exercise sound judgment. Emotion may distort the sense of values. HERE TOO the funeral director who is a worthy representative of his profession can extend a helping hand. He will assist you with his thorough knowledge, with his broad experience, and with his understanding of situations and problems that are unfamiliar to you. ABOVE ALL, your funeral director will give prudent counsel in the matter of funeral costs. He will advise against unwise or unwarranted expenses. It is his duty to you and to his profession to render services that will be in proper proportion to your means. IN THIS way, your funeral director is again the "friend in a time of need,"—sympathetic and genuinely helpful. N. J. Miller's Son, 704 South Avenue, Monroe 50.
