THE CONTRIBUTION OF THE PRIVATE BUSINESS SCHOOL

By Ernest W. Vogel, Jr.

It is a well-known fact that the business world has been the beneficiary of the private business school.

This happened at the Hotel Astor 150 private business schools in the United States.

Some aspects of this situation are surprising. After all many private schools are in the luxury class.

There may be reasons. Perhaps it is because Americans rebel against being cast in a common mold.

It is heartening to note that young men and women in Rochester and vicinity are not behind those of New York.

One year ago the nation suffered the most severe cold spell ever recorded. Rochester, with many other communities, reported the coldest weather in history.

The severe weather of last year and the present winter cause much thought to be given to coal bills.

Other bills may be paid by the same method, bringing greater comfort and ease of mind.

A Romantic Story

With Scenes Laid in the Genesee Valley

By AGNES HORSCH HOFMASTER

Playing the Game

Pete was grinning. Swell house. This marvelous fireplace and wonderful people. A hifalutin' place of rest, and, still he remembered his identity, he'd play it all.

"Where's my car?" he asked Andy, leaning on an elbow that he suddenly found to be sore.

"Out in the yard."

"I don't know. Except a bottle."

"About half."

"Boy! I must have been a mess."

"Search me, little one."

"There are as many other things."

"Do."

"The blasé youth sipping of all things good and beautiful."

"Do it? Oh well! That's a pose."

"You, Pete thought rapidly. You picked me up and brought me home."

"She saw no mockery here and the few men she knew were big inside and out."

"Well, she was wrong seriously. If you are well enough by Thursday, you can go to the barn dance with us and see for yourself what a good substitute almost anything wholesome makes for getting drunk and smashing everything up."

"Lord! I'm smashed all right."

"How the devil do I know whether I am Marc Antony or Harold Lloyd?"

"Well, Marc is dead and you hadn't any spectacles, so Pete Smith will have to do. But . . . anxiety crept into her voice. 'I wish you would hurry and . . . and get well. So I know what you want with me. Get well, I mean.'"

"Do you wish it as much as I do, kid? Ah, trouble doth drip upon my lovely brow."

"Trouble? Oh! It's on mine that trouble drips."

"Pete thought she meant her crutch. His world-wise eyes softened and he said with something like gentleness in his mocking voice. 'Raw deal for you kid. But keep a stiff upper lip. You have a world that I have in spite of the lack. How'd it happen anyway?'"

"Andy reddened. She never could help it when any allusion was made to her helplessness. But she held her head with its curly crown went up and she smiled straight into Pete Smith's eyes. 'I didn't mean that I always keep a stiff lip about the old man's affairs. I mean that . . . But I was run over by an auto once and it makes me so sick to even think of it that—anyway, the doctor says if I'd only get as scared about something as I was when I was then, I might be all right.'"

"We'll have to arrange that scare then," said Pete soberly and turned his head away. For Andy's eyes were now fixed down to the bottom of his hardboiled, hardboiled heart, and he wanted to close his own and think.

"Now who was he? And why?"

consumed broth, and biscuits—fresh from the oven.

"Fuzzle To Solve

Pete had the slightest recollection of seeing her that morning. When he calmly informed her he was Pete, she commented slyly, for she'd resolved that she and Larry would get behind this man and solve it together. Something sure was rotten in Denmark and she was going to find out what.

"Pete Smith? My, you look too Irish to be Dutch."

"My mother was Irish, Baby Doll."

"Humph. Don't let my mother hear you call me baby doll. She's Irish, too, but she isn't quite as up to date as you are, and get this, neither am I. Add neither is Andy."

"Well that Andy? Where is she?"

"She's in as good as the eye as you and Maryana, she can call me Dennis all she likes."

"You act like you never saw me before, Dennis."

"Do it? Oh well! That's a pose."

"You, Pete thought rapidly. You picked me up and brought me home."

"She saw no mockery here and the few men she knew were big inside and out."

Lifesavers both RADIO'S SOS AND THE TELEPHONE

Life on Land and Sea is Safer for these Two

What comfort it must be to seafarers that their ships are radio-equipped! Disaster may threaten, but the world will know, and other ships will answer the dramatic SOS.

What the radio is to a ship the telephone is to a home. Over it go the SOS's of the community to police, firemen, doctor, hospital. Without a telephone a home is as defenseless as a ship without a radio.

We urge that every home protect itself against the threat of the unforeseen, with the day-and-night safety service of the telephone.

Call our Business Office, Main 5000—37 Street—for new service or an extension telephone.
