

URGES CATHOLIC LAYMEN TO MAKE COMING RETREAT FOR OWN GOOD

for the offensive and defensive content in which he must engage.

Plan Future
The essential work of a retreat is constructive and has to do with the planning of the future. A good retreat has two phases: the other routing out process; the other planting. One tearing down; the other building up. One destructive; the other constructive, and it is the latter phase that is the important one.

"Like a tonic, the retreat must rid the soul of impurities and hence confession may be necessary, but its chief objective is to invigorate the system."

"Though Laymen's Retreats are generally made in groups, a retreat is most individualistic—its whole course is directed toward group piety, but toward the building of the individual soul. It is distinctive of a retreat that every retreatant makes a retreat for himself."

Highly Recommended
"Why make a retreat? The first answer to this question for a Catholic is that the Holy Spirit and the spiritual needs of the laity of the Church so earnestly and insistently recommend it."

"In his better moments, every man wishes that he might live at least one day as perfectly as the saints did, in close contact with God and doing his duty completely and sinlessly. If it had no other advantage than giving one a chance to pass two or three days perfectly, it would be a valuable asset."

"The utility and necessity of a retreat becomes obvious when one recalls that it is a system of spiritual bookkeeping, the balancing of ledgers as it were, and the settling of the soul's affairs. Just as the merchant annually checks over his books at least once to see how he stands financially, so the retreatant looks into their souls to see what has taken place there to ascertain their spiritual assets, and liabilities, to weigh themselves in the balance, and if found wanting to obtain a new supply of spiritual capital, which is the Grace of God. Thus they insure themselves against spiritual bankruptcy."

"Who should make a retreat? Every man, for every man has a soul to save. Every man wants to make a success in life, and a retreat points the way to spiritual success."

"Saints admit the need of a retreat. The Church law prescribes retreats for the clergy and religious men and women. If these, with the many extraordinary graces they already have, need an occasional renovation of the spiritual lives, how much more the laymen who usually lack these helps yet have to live constantly surrounded on all sides by the temptations of the world."

"There is no age limit: both old and young alike should take advantage of a retreat. It gives the aged a means of calmly and peacefully preparing themselves for the last journey."

Safeguards Youth
"Youth on the other hand will find in it a safeguard against many pitfalls that prove the destruction of innocence and happiness of others, because they were not forewarned. Young people, especially who are perplexed about the choice of their career or manner of life, can find much light shed on their problems in the choice of a vocation."

"The Knights of Columbus, the National Council of Catholic Men and Women and other Catholic organizations have passed resolutions endorsing the closed retreat movement and exhorting their members to take advantage of the opportunity to participate in these spiritual exercises."

"Thousands of testimonials can be had in regard to the benefits to be derived from a closed retreat. A retreatant does not have to be urged to come again."

"When you are going to make one but just never get to it. They are really not sincere and as a matter of fact don't want to make a retreat. They refuse to break away from home ties, business, clubs and other pleasures, or for some other equally insufficient cause."

"Then there are some who would like to make a retreat and want to make one but not just now, perhaps some time later. They are procrastinators. They never do what they say they will. They never give a resolution the chance to reach the stage of execution."

"Thank God, however, there is a third class of men who have conceived the desire to make a retreat and have the character and determination to go through with it. They recognize a retreat as a season of Grace and will make any sacrifice necessary. In which class do you belong?"

Boiler Insurance Needed, Says Ashley Firm Head

Heating and hot water supply equipment can explode with terrific violence, news stories in the press at the time of the explosion at the Robert F. Ashley Co., headquarters for insurance, since 1852, this week points out the number and severity of such accidents in emphasizing the need for insurance on boilers, particularly on so-called low pressure type of boiler used in buildings heated by hot water or steam.

Mr. Griffith recalls that recently a fatal accident occurred in a home at Westfield, Pa., where the explosion of a heating boiler scalded three little girls so badly that they died. Only a few months ago a school in Forest, Miss., the explosion of a small hot water supply tank killed one young student, injured 11 and caused about $30,000 property damage.

About a year ago an accident occurred to a low pressure hot water heating boiler in a church near Rochester, likewise causing damage estimated at $30,000. Fortunately, Mr. Griffith states, this happened when the building was unoccupied. To quote from a newspaper account of this loss:

"The explosion in the church occurred at three o'clock on a Sunday afternoon. Had it occurred during morning or evening services, when the church was filled with people, a considerable loss of life would have resulted from the explosion."

Mr. Griffith at the office, 212 Union Trust Bldg. or Main 444, will answer any and all inquiries concerning boiler insurance and explain what the insurance companies' staff of engineers and inspectors will do to reduce the probability of these accidents to heating equipment.
