IN MODERNIZING your home it is often found that by adding a few well-considered changes here and there the exterior appearance of the house and grounds can be greatly changed for the better. Walls, fences and gates are simple and practical methods of improving the home and grounds.

Try adding a picket or plain board fence around the property, connecting up with the house - not too high (about 30 inches is a good height) and where needed have the carpenter make a gate of an interesting design.

White picket fences and picket gates always go well with the Colonial or frame styles, while in a brick or English style house a fence of wide stained boards with an interesting designed gate lends much attraction to the property. The boards may be of varying widths set tight together with a narrow space between, say from 1/2 inch to 1 inch apart. Or they may be all the same width. Possibly the tops may be shaped or cutouts between the boards resorted to for variety.

The gates illustrated above are well adapted to the latter sort of fences. They are easily made of wide planks and should be stained or gaily painted.
