Crying In The Dark

By Eileen Leary

If I could make a little song With a scribbling, scratching pen, And hear it being sung On the lips of many men; Or paint a little picture Of some far off land And see the children tracing it Crudely on the sand; Or design a little town The color of the sky And catch a glimpse of it As someone hurried by; Yet never make a little home For the weary traveler, I'd think that after all There was nothing I could do, If I couldn't make a home Where one heart might gaily sing.
