First Foreign Mission Society Founded In United States

By REV. OWEN B. MCGUIRE, D. D.

The Maryknoll Mission has interested me from its inception, and so when I received from Monsignor Ford a personal invitation to attend his consecration there on September 21 I decided to make the journey.

olly—a Catholic principle that has become a proverb.

When I was preparing my examination history for the academic degree at Innsbruck, I read a very splendid article in Herodotus's Kirckenlexicon on the conversion of the German peoples.

These two priests met the Eucharistic Congress in Montserrat in the summer of 1910. The hearts of both was the same vision, and neither was surprised when the other spoke of the "Foreign Missions."

On June 29, the Feast of the Apostles St. Peter and Paul came the approval of Rome, and in the following year, 1912, the first "Seminary" was opened in a roomy building on a hill near the city.

Flower Island illustrates this idea. That young girl behind the walls of an obscure convent, entirely unknown to the world, was helping the missions, and for now the copatron, with St. Francis Xavier, of all the missions of the world.

It was a delight to see this ideal of the great Saint of Avila realized at Maryknoll. It is significant, too, that the first few ladies who established themselves at Maryknoll, without vows or religious uniform, but just to help in whatever way they could the work of the mission, were called and called themselves "Missionaries."

DESTROYED BY FIRE - Rome (NOW - Film) - Word has just been received here of the destruction by fire of the college of the Brothers of Charity of Avila, at Pieterburg, in the Prefecture Apostolic of North Transvaal, South Africa.
