A CHRONOLOGY—A presentation of the outstanding events in the Diocese of Rochester, from the issuance of the last Official Review and Annual Calendarium, August, 1934, through September, 1935.

As a contribution to the celebration of the Centennial of Rochester, the Paine Drug Company of 324 Main St. East had a window display containing the names of some of the earliest pioneers whose living relatives the Centennial Pioneer Committee had granted certificates. Father Etienne de Carheil was the earliest collateral ancestor to be recognized. His collateral heir was his several times great-grand-nephew, the Viscount Alain De Carheil, who lives in the family Chateau at Carentoir, Morbihan, France.

workers had it been permitted to continue. Since it was disbanded, there has occurred a very considerable and widespread fall in wage rates. Intelligent believers in social justice will not seek to abolish the AAA, thus reducing all classes to the starvation level of unregulated industry and unregulated competition, but will strive for effective methods for raising wages.

Pope Leo XIII, to whom civilization owes much for his activities as regards social justice. Born in 1810, elected pope in 1878, he spent much time writing and considering the question. His first encyclical as pope attacked the fundamental errors of socialism. But most noted of his writings is his "Rerum Novarum," which set forth with profound erudition the Christian principles bearing on the relations between capital and labor, thus giving a vigorous impulse to the social movement along Catholic lines.

and not subject to regulation by Congress. Therefore, it will be impossible for Congress to enact laws fixing wages, minimum hours or fair practices in those industries until it is authorized to do so by an amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The most vocal opponents of such an amendment are evidently moved by the desire to prevent any effective regulation of industry by government. They are in favor of a policy of laissez-faire and unlimited competition.

Other opponents demand that the necessary industrial regulation be left to the states. They regard a constitutional amendment as involving an undue increase of federal power at the expense of state powers. These persons seem to be totally ignorant of the constitutional situation. An amendment authorizing Congress to fix wages and hours and to regulate industrial conditions generally would take no power from the states because the states have no such power. So, at least, the Supreme Court has decided in the District of Columbia and Arizona Minimum Wage Cases and in the New York Ten-Hour Law case. According to the court, such legislation by the states violates the Due Process Clause of the Federal Constitution. Hence, the plea for states' rights in this matter is irrelevant and impertinent.

7. The Guffey Coal Bill. This measure would reestablish the essential provisions of the NRA codes in the soft coal industry. Insofar as it aims at fair wages, reasonable hours and fair prices, it is clearly in harmony with social justice. Insofar as it is intended to deal intelligently with the enormous overproduction, waste and demoralization in that industry, it tends to promote the common welfare.

Social Ethicist

8. The Banking Law. The relation between this measure and social justice is not so evident as in the other pieces of legislation considered in this paper. Nevertheless, the relation exists. Pope Pius XI points out the particularly damaging effect of economic power "when it is exercised by those who, because they hold and control money, are able also to govern credit and determine its allotment. . . . For the first time in our history, this control is placed dominantly in the hands of the public authorities, instead of being held exclusively by a group of bankers. The supreme control of money and credit can now be exercised with an eye single to the public welfare."

REVEREND JOHN A. RYAN is in a position to speak with authority upon the subject of political science, economics and government. Monsignor Ryan has served as professor of political science at Trinity College, professor of Social Ethics at the National Catholic School of Social Service; professor of moral theology and industrial ethics at Catholic University of America. He has acted also in the capacity of Director of the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Council. To his credit are a number of books and treatises dealing with political problems and the relation of the Catholic Church to these problems. In 1933 Monsignor Ryan was elevated to the rank of domestic prelate by Pope Pius XI.

9. The Walsh Bill requiring NRA wages and labor standards to be observed by all concerns having contracts with the Federal Government has passed the Senate, but at this writing seems likely to fail in the House of Representatives. For the sake of social justice, it is to be hoped that this forecast is mistaken and that the bill will be enacted into law before this Session of Congress adjourns.

For some days after the NRA was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court the National Administration seemed to be exploring the possibility of reenacting the main features of the National Industrial Recovery Act. In due time the question was decided adversely, and with good reason. In its decision outlawing the NRA the Court quoted with approval from its opinion in a former case the declaration that manufacturing, mining, agricultural and trading are not interstate commerce.
