Love's Messengers

Ye little Stars, that twinkle high
In the dark vault of heaven,
Like sparkles on the deep-blue sky,
Perhaps to you 'tis given
To shed your lucid radiance now
Upon my absent-loved one's brow?

Ye fleecy Clouds, that swiftly glide
O'er earth's oft-darkened way,
Floating along in grace and pride,
Perhaps your shadows stray
E'en now across the starry light
That guides my wanderer forth tonight?

Ye balmy Breezes sweeping by
And shedding freshness-round
Ye, too, may haply as ye fly,
With health and fragrance crowned,
Linger a moment, soft and light,
To sport amid his tresses bright?

Then, Stars, Clouds, and Breezes, bear
My heart's best wish to him
And say the feelings glowing there
Nor time nor change can dim;
That he success or grief his share,
My loves still brightening shall appear.
