A PROBLEM

BOTH LEGAL AND FINANCIAL

To the layman, the law governing the transfer of money or property by will or gift may seem peculiar in some of its provisions . . . particularly when, as so often happens, ignorance of these provisions causes needless disappointment and expense. Legal advice is always advisable in such matters, regardless of the value of the property to be willed or given away.

However, the law is helpful in making it possible for banks to help people manage estates and trust funds, and in fixing the charge for such service at low rates.

This bank is empowered by law to act in this fiduciary capacity. Out of its experience it advises you . . . if you have money or property to consider for eventual disposal . . . to see your attorney. It also invites you to consult with its Trust Department on the financial aspects of your problem. The size of the amount in question makes no difference.

Our Declining Years
