USE VESSELS 106 YEARS OLD AT MASS AT SITE OF FIRST CONVENT IN U. S.

PORT TOBACCO, MD. (NC)—A chalice, ciborium and ostensorium, some of the precious relics used at the first convent in the United States, were used again Tuesday the Feast of Our Lady of Mount Carmel when services were held at the site of this ancient convent which is being restored near this place.

The work of restoring Mount Carmel in Maryland is now in progress, but it was possible to make ready the older of the two buildings for the celebration of Mass, followed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

The Mass, which was at 9 o'clock, was celebrated by the Rev. Lawrence J. Kelly, S. J., Rector of St. Aloysius church, Washington, D. C., and Chaplain of the Restorers of Mount Carmel in Maryland. Many of the Restorers and a number of guests attended the Mass. Most of these present received Holy Communion.

The chalice, ciborium and ostensorium used for the services were loaned by the Very Rev. Mother Seraphim, Prioress of the Baltimore Carmel, where the relics are preserved. These precious vessels were brought over from their Carmel in Antwerp in 1790 by the pioneer nuns who established the first convent near here. They were used by the Rev. Charles Neale, S. J., on the voyage over and continued to be used at the convent during its early days.

When the Carmelite nuns moved from Port Tobacco to Baltimore 106 years ago, they took the sacred vessels and other precious relics with them.

Catholics' Attitude Lauded by Minister At Orange Meeting

SARIS, Ont. (NC)—Frankly I prefer that the schools be rather admirably and respect them for their concern and loyalty to their conviction that their children should get religious instruction in the schools," the Rev. Murray Simmonds declared in addressing the Orange Lodges at the annual church parade here to Central Baptist Church.

Rev. Mr. Simmonds said he feared Protestants were falling to look after sufficiently well the spiritual education of their children.

SPANISH DRIVE ON CATHOLIC SCHOOLS GROWS

MADRID—The campaign against the Catholic schools of Spain is being pushed in various parts of the country in spite of the fact that it is patently illegal.

The campaign is serving very definitely to emphasize not only the value of the Catholic right of education and how much Spain owes to the Catholic Church and the teaching of religion for its culture, but also that it is materially and morally impossible to substitute for the religious in popular education in Spain.

Actually, the campaign against the religious is a campaign against the Catholic school. The Marxists hate the Catholic school and do everything in their power to destroy it.

The Catholic deputies in the Parliament protested to the Government against the acts of certain local authorities which, it was charged, were illegal. A Marxist deputy, a certain Sr. Lopez, asserted that "the teaching of religious proscribes the conscience of children." At this point, the Catholic deputies rose to their feet and their voice characterized the speaker as "an educator with the soul of a corporal."

Deputies Leave Parliament

The Minister of Education sought to evade the stand of Lopez, but he managed to assert that it is necessary to create a system of education which will displace the poor and inadequate teaching of the schools.

The bitterness of such words in the face of what the great colleges of the Jesuits, teaching Brothers, and others have done for the nation and the honor which they have brought upon the culture of the country, caused such resentment among the Catholic deputies that they left the Parliament.

In spite of all this, the miserable situation which the Catholic schools persist in, arising in different places and under different forms. The Socialist Council at Barcelona confiscated the seminary there and threw the seminary out into the street. The courts, however, annulled a resolution of the Council of Tury, which sought to expropriate the seminary there.

Catholic deputies accompanied a committee of the Fathers of Families from Orense when they bore a protest containing 6000 signatures. The protest invoked the Penal Code against the injustices of the authorities, or it might have been said against the Marxists, who are in control there. They closed four colleges three of them private and one conducted by the Salesian Fathers.

Merchants Protest

The Merchants' League of Madrid addressed a communication to the Minister of Education signed by 4000 citizens asking that the 500 students of the Fathers of Families be not deprived of schooling facilities merely because certain councillors wanted it. These schools, it might be added, were established by an Archbishop with funds furnished by various families who emigrated to America.

In Valencia the Religious also were discharged from the hospital. The authorities brought in some inefficient women which the women began to do stupid things in caring for the patients, the doctors asked the nuns to return until they were again trained in the proper care of the sick, the nuns as well as the Religious in Corpus, will probably be discharged again, to satisfy some crack-brained officials.

He established a kind of self-government by the students and told them they could sign the "International" to their heart's content.
