The Coming Of The MONSTER
 A Story Of The Masterful Monk

The spirit behind the beautiful scene in the darkness of the night, the terrace flooded with light, the monk had not noticed.

He had left them together. He was standing now, looking where in the distance the light flood was encroaching the dark and shimmering water, turning towards the place where the path of the stream was.

The ending of the stream, on the face of it, a strange, arbitrary, unaccountable, unexplainable thing. No angel from heaven had come down. There was no being asked to account for it. He had lived and worked for his Paradise for that Paradise. But, Veritas!

That cry of his heart, the monk's own unspoken confession, he could only guess the answer. He could only guess the answer. He could only guess the answer.
