DETROIT. A new and brilliant chapter in the history of the American Church was written here this week with the Most Rev. Edward Mooney, first Archbishop of Detroit in the leading role.

Before one of the largest gatherings of the North American hierarchy ever assembled, 10 archbishops and 60 bishops, the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States enthroned Archbishop Mooney as first Metropolitan of the Detroit province at a brilliant ceremony in the Church of the Most Blessed Sacrament Tuesday.

Among the prelates participating in the ceremony were the Most Rev. James Edward Kearney, who transferred from the See of Salt Lake City to the See of Rochester, who announced a few hours before the start of the installation rites, the Most Rev. Archbishop Thomas F. Hickey, second Bishop of Rochester, and the Most Rev. William A. Foley, Bishop-elect of Syracuse.

The installation, carried on with all the solemn pageantry of the ancient rite, was witnessed by some 1,400 priests and religious and an invited group of the laity including a delegation from Rochester where Archbishop Mooney served for nearly four years prior to his appointment to Detroit.

The Archbishop arrived here from Rochester in a special car accompanied by a group of the clergy and laity of that city. It stepped off the train into the city at an auspicious moment when some 5,000 people gathered in Roosevelt Park opposite Michigan Central Station.

After receiving the greetings of the Rt. Rev. Mag. John M. Doyle, administrator of the Detroit Diocese, Governor Frank Murphy of Michigan and James Fitzgerald, president of the National Catholic Charities Conference, Archbishop Mooney gave his first message to his assembled diocesan.

Bishop Kearney's Message

"I am very much delighted with the appointment, with the honor and with the confidence manifested by the Holy See. My only hope is to be a worthy successor of the outstanding group of prelates who have conferred such honor upon the See. To that end, I humbly solicit the prayers of the priests, the religious and my good people of the See of Rochester."

He was consecrated fourth Bishop of Salt Lake, succeeding the Most Rev. John J. Hitty, now Archbishop of San Francisco, on October 28, 1927, by His Eminence Patrick Cardinal Hayes, who it is expected will install Bishop Kearney as Bishop of Rochester.

Bishop Kearney's motto is "In Te Domine Speravi," which means "I have hope in Thee, Lord."

Although he has had charge of one of the smallest dioceses in the country with a Catholic population of 10,000, 33 priests and 28 nuns, Bishop Kearney is recognized as one of the ablest members of the North American hierarchy.
