IN ONE CARE

By ART KELLY
 WHAM's well known and widely appreciated Chevrolet Musical Moments Revue has recently been given a new lease on life by the addition of Vic Arden. As an active partner of the two-piece team of Vic Arden and Arden, Arden's fingers have made radio history. In this modernized program, he has added a keyboard and now does with his musical brain and brawn on the responsive strings and wind instruments of a three-piece orchestra. The addition of this new talent to the program, which has been broadcast weekly since last Tuesday and Thursday nights at 8:15 P. M., will make it still more interesting.

Dr. Arthur C. Parker, Director of the Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences, has a new program over WHAM titled "Romance of Old Indian Days." On the air each Tuesday evening at 7:30 P. M. the program features stories on the American Indian life of the past. The program is a most interesting and educational one. It will include guest appearances of Indians from nearby reservations. The program is broadcast on the NBC studios and will be heard over a great many radio stations.

Tyrone Power star of WHAM's new Hollywood Playhouse Sunday at 9:00 P. M. first broke through as a leading feature in the papers. It is a time when stage and screen jobs were not so plentiful as they are now. Tyrone Power's star of WHAM's new Hollywood Playhouse Sunday at 9:00 P. The Magic Key of RCA unique distinction of having caused a traffic jam at an airport. It was several weeks ago that the Magic Key linked the world in a broadcast from airplanes flying over various parts of the Washington, D.C. airport and hundreds of motorists leaving the program on auto radio promptly dashed to the airport to see the plane in action. As a result traffic was held up for an hour and the pilot was virtually mobbed by the curious spectators when he landed.

Did you notice that Sid was absent from many of the Vic and Sade programs recently? The reason is quite startling for now Sid has a radio-brother. The name is "Eddie Duchin," the Sade of Vic and Sade and Mrs. C. C. Doherty in private life became the mother of a seven sound baby boy recently in Parkland Hospital, Chicago. The babe has been named Anthony.

The Pirate of Refuge Island

By H. T. GARRICK

INSTALLMENT V
 As we sped over the water on our return trip, Mr. Parsons made no attempt to conceal his anxiety over what might be happening on Refuge Island. Finally, a man who was in charge of the vessel tried to relieve his mind.
 "Since the fellow knows he's here got away in the boat to go for help, he's supposed to have you as a hostage. He'll be in here in a few minutes as fast as he can."
 "I doubt it," replied Mr. Parsons. "He may have just had a rowboat or an outboard to get to Refuge Island, and he won't have anything else to get away in. He'll probably go out to sea in it, and he'll be in a bad way if he's not back here in a few minutes."
 "I doubt it," replied Mr. Parsons. "He may have just had a rowboat or an outboard to get to Refuge Island, and he won't have anything else to get away in. He'll probably go out to sea in it, and he'll be in a bad way if he's not back here in a few minutes."

He saw that he didn't have a chance taken to the house and felt sure Parsons climbed into the ancient boat to take the officers and their prisoner back to Broad Beach, and wanted me to go with him to bring the speaker back, while Sam descended the stairs, but somehow I had enough for one day so Jake went instead.
 We watched them go, and then the rest of us sat down and relaxed after the most exciting day we'd ever spent. I wish I could tell you all the details of the day, but Aunt Louise said about how brave Bill and I were, but it would sound like bragging. Anyway, they certainly more than repaid us for what we'd done by being wonderful to us all summer.
 And Carol, my sister, certainly thought I was a bit after that. "You did a lot of good today," she said. "That night Bill and I were still talking about the day's exciting. Tomorrow we'll have to go down and explore the cave." I told Bill I'd get to see that place yet. Bill's full of robbers and everything else.
 "Can I go with you?" cried Carol excitedly. "Just think, there really might be some treasure. You know, some jewelry that the robber dropped, maybe."
 That struck us as a great idea, and the next morning, and early in the afternoon, we set out for Refuge Island. We searched every inch of the cave in the hope of finding something of value. And although we found the bones in which the robber had come to the island, and searched that, too, we never found any jewels.
 Oh well, I guess I didn't care much. I had a wonderful time anyway, and it sure was exciting while it lasted. And I decided that even if you don't find real treasure, desperate robbers are enough like them to suit me.

THE ADVENTURES OF PETER PEN

Old King Snarl, who is in a sort of daze, does not realize we are making our escape. The Talking Pencil is set to take off, and there is a mad scramble to get on his back before Snarl catches us.
 Cactus Morgan leads the way, and we are off for the Cave of the Gnomes. "Another one of your schemes gone wrong!" yells Snarl. "If you hadn't stopped to crowd, you'd have had the flower," snaps the Hermit.
 We're back in the deadly Cave of the Gnomes, where a drop of water from the roof will turn you to stone. Cover up, everybody, and let's find the Princess and try out the juice of the mountain flower.
