THE PLAN

To grasp the importance of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith it is essential to understand the great divine task it receives. It resembles a vast, solidly constructed building. The architect who draws the plans and assigns to different workmen the various parts to be done are the bishops; the laborers are the missionaries, and the whole Catholic world collects the materials for the building. This is the task assigned to the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, that of collecting alms to be sent to the

LIKE AN ARMY

The Society is composed of one body, one great army. The Commander-in-chief of this army is the Pope, who gives orders to the Sacred Congregations of Propaganda Fide and of the Oriental Church; the officers are the bishops; the soldiers are the missionaries; the nurses are the Sisters.

The army is active in the field and is united with the internal front by an organization of control and commissariat, which supplies the necessities that are necessary for the life and work of the missionaries.
