...of wealth, but merely the trustees and administrators of invested funds. Responsibility is thus divorced from ownership. Nevertheless, they have in their hands the very soul of production since they supply its life-blood and no one can breathe against their will.

"The increasing rate of debt to total wealth has had its influence in lessening the responsibility and advantage which should attach to the ownership of property. It makes for insecurity. Its relationship moreover to the cost of living or a reasonable price level needs careful inquiry. Further study should be given, likewise, to the whole intricate problem of money and credit so that such evils as exist in the present system may be brought to light and suitable remedies introduced.

"Another method of destroying the liberty of the people, although it begins by lauding democracy and proclaiming freedom, is to establish the dictatorship of an absolutist State. Referring to this totalitarian State, Pope Pius XI in Quadragesimo Anno asserts: 'It is feared that the new syndical and corporative institution possesses an excessively bureaucratic and political character, and that, notwithstanding the general advantages referred to above, it risks serving particular political aims rather than contributing to the initiation of a better social order.' (p. 30) This kind of State is contrary to the letter and spirit of the Austrian Constitution.

"The totalitarian State 'It first gives to the people many services; and then it establishes a multiplicity of functions which the people must perform. It should attempt to discharge. Gradually the totalitarian State assumes the responsibility and function of the capitalist, the industrialist, the agriculturalist, the merchant, and the employer. All this inevitably leads, not to a free State, but to a slave State. The tendency of our time is to make more and more demands on government. Citizens and groups should not ask the government to do for them what they can do for themselves. Sound social policy requires government to encourage citizens to assume as much personal responsibility as possible.

"The poor and the laboring classes should resist the tendency to set up the omnipotent State. Their chief economic defense is organization. The traditional and ideal Christian society is not an individualistic but an organic society in which the individual through the instrumentality of his group works for himself, his group, and the entire social body.

"It is deplorable that in our country an internecine conflict has broken out between two large organized bodies of workers. Continuance of the struggle can only mean increased suffering and hardship for workers themselves. It is gratifying that conferences looking to conciliation have been initiated, and for the well-being of workers, employers, and the entire people, it is earnestly to be desired that these conferences will continue in a spirit of give and take, thereby providing the basis for harmony and lasting peace.

"It is essential that labor unions be governed by the principles of Christian brotherhood, justice and fair-play. They should embrace all groups of workers. While seeking to promote their own interests they should be guided by sound judgment, have regard for the common economic good, respect property rights, prove themselves worthy of the confidence of every community, and thus perform their rightful function in protecting the legitimate interests of their members and in giving strength and stability to the nation.
