Unwelcome Visitors - - - W. BOYCE MORGAN

INSTALLMENT I

Dan Turner's arms were freshly pressed suits in crisp creases as he entered the lobby of the Sheridan apartments. The young woman at the desk looked up at him and he stopped there on his way to the elevator.

"Hello, Mr. Turner," said the switchboard operator. "I have some more calls for you."

She consulted a pad, tore off a sheet and handed it to Dan. He scanned the load of suits to one side and glanced at the sheet of paper and shoved it into his pocket.

"Thanks, Miss Horn," he said. "I'll get them as soon as I deliver these."

For the next ten minutes Dan was busy tapping on apartment doors delivering suits, collecting money and making change. Then he consulted the slip in his pocket, and made a half dozen more stops picking up suits to be cleaned, pressed or repaired. His face wore an exultant grin as he reached the street once more.

"I wish they'd build some more big apartment houses around here," he said to himself. "This one has certainly helped our business."

At the corner he waited for the traffic light to change then crossed the boulevard and turned down a side street. Immediately the character of the neighborhood changed as it so often does in large cities. Instead of the gleaming stone of the apartment building he now saw dingy little stores and old-fashioned houses. The doors from the corner he turned into a small shop whose window bore the words "John Roden Tailor and Alterations."

Mr. Roden was standing behind the counter as Dan entered. He was a short man, partly bald, with a face that usually wore a kindly expression. But just now his face was white and his eyes smoldered with anger. When Dan held up the suits he brought back he showed no sign of pleasure and Dan stared at him in surprise.

"What's wrong, Mr. Roden?" he inquired.

"Wrong? Yes, there's plenty wrong. Last week when business was improving and things look good, something always happens. I never know it to fail!"

"But what is it?" Dan deposited the suit on the counter and asked Mr. Roden to step up from behind it on his crippled leg.

"Old silver who owns the building was just in here. He says I've got to move at the end of next month."

"But I thought you had a lease on the place for two more years," Dan replied. "That's why he wasn't able to raise your rent when he tried to do it last month, wasn't it?"

"Sure," retorted Mr. Roden. "Sure I have a lease. I was smart, signing up for five years, three years when rents were low. But this place is worth more money now than the big apartment building is on the corner, and Old Man Silver knows it. So he tells me I have to move. Why? Because he says the building is unsafe and ordered it vacated."

While Dan stared Mr. Roden pounded the counter in helpless rage. "He can't fool me, the old crook! He's got a lot of political pull, and that's how he got the building pronounced unsafe. Then when he gets me out of here, along with the other tenants who have short leases, he'll spend a few dollars on repairs and then get the building approved again. And after that he'll rent it at a lot higher rate."

"But you're not going to let him get away with that, are you?" Dan exclaimed indignantly. "Isn't there something you can do about it?"

Mr. Roden spread his hands helplessly. "What can I do?" he demanded. "I'm only a poor tailor. Nobody would listen to me. I told him I wouldn't move, and that he'd have to pay me plenty for getting me to tear up my lease but I was just bluffing. He'll get me out of here within 30 days, and you can bet on that! And where will I be able to find another shop around here at a rent I can afford to pay?"

Dan was silent. While a worried frown creased his brow, Mr. Roden crossed his arms, and he knew that the tailor was in a real predicament. If he couldn't find another shop, which he could afford to rent, he'd have to go out of bus-

Catholic Bowling League

St. Michael's pinners maintained their championship gain by sweeping through three decisively won games last night. High three game total, 620, was rolled by St. Zeller of Holy Rosary. A Angelo had a six three game total as a Pileter, to reach 692, both for St. Carmel.

St. Margaret Mary's registered three straight victories over the Immaculate Conception keglers. Mr. Carmel's bowler came from behind in the first stanza to out roll St. John's Bowlers by two H R A A No. 2 team did the same with Holy Rosary.

St. Boniface outfit went strong in the first two games with H R A A No. 1 only to lose out in the third. St. Mary's won the first and third games from Corpus Christi in one of those in-and-out matches.

Other high three-game totals were rolled by W. Drews, St. Boniface 578; E. Hach 586 and John Steles, 596 for St. Michael's; Wood Hays, Holy Rosary, 578; P. Kausch, 579; Joe Weber, 578 for St. Margaret Mary's; Scaris.

Polish Rams Captain Injured in Game

Forced to the sidelines because of injuries to Stanley Wurdynski, youthful basketball star of the Polish Rams.

In a game Friday in which he had scored a total of 8 goals, in the first half, he sprained his thumb. Captain of the Rams, he will be missed. His extraordinary foul-shooting helped to defeat Auburn. When Wurdynski will return to the line-up is not known.
