Rival Prospectors Race for Gold In Game You Can Make Yourself

By Ray J. Marran

In this spinning counter game, played by moving markers over two separate trails, representing an area of the Klondike gold country in British Columbia, two players may imagine they are rival prospectors.

To make a story of the game, you may suppose the action starts at an Indian trading post, known as Toad River Post One of the players has befriended an old Indian trapper The Indian tells this player the location of a rich vein of gold in Klondike gold country The other player overhears the location of the claim and decides to get to the location and stake the claim first.

Both players start at the Toad River Post High spin on the arrow counter gives a player his choice of trails The moves over the trails are determined as each player takes his turn spinning the arrow pointer, moving his marker as indicated by the arrow The player reaching the finish position first, files claim on the gold vein, and thereby wins the game

Making the Game Board

The game board is not difficult to draw, as the drawing and the location of the different trails need not be accurate Merely sketch in the positions of the towns along the trail lines, then mark on the trail lines evenly spaced dots Make about every third or fourth dot a penalty position, as shown Use pen and ink for drawing the game on a sheet of cardboard about 12 inches wide by 18 inches long Make the spinning arrow counter as shown Use large-headed tacks for markers

As your marker moves along a trail you will encounter many difficulties— such as a traveler in this country would experience These hazards hold a player back and cause him to spin the arrow pointer many times before he reaches the finish" position

In drawing this game, one trail is supposed to be overland The other trail is partly by land then by canoe on a river If you have read stories of the Northwest, you probably will recognize some of the towns, the rivers, and the country through which the trails of this game will lead you
