MAMA'S BOY

A Short Story By JOAN LEINEN

Jody Lindstrom was angry, telling all her troubles to Mr. Middleton, the biggest rainbow trout on this side of the Mississippi as she sought vainly to entice his appetite by the fly on the end of her line.

It was bad enough when the Calverts had to break in on us and then stay but when that loud down son of theirs, Lane Calvert, refused mother's forced invitation because he had other more suitable accommodations elsewhere it was the pay-off accommodations that was a bawling house and we were just dying for his company. Oh, I hope he has to sleep on ant hills for the rest of his life.

"Morning, Pop," she called. "I'll have coffee ready in a jiffy." "Shhhhh!" whispered Pop. "The Calverts aren't awake yet."

"Oh, drat the Calverts. Why can't they get up on time for once. After all, beggars can't be choosers," Jody muttered.

"Good morning, Jody. Good morning, Peter. You look like a pill for that cough," Mrs. Calvert said as she cured Lane of his cough.

"Pop, what if I do?" Jody queried thunderstruck. "I was only being funny and I wouldn't need a doctor because you were the only person who had any food and I was starving to death."

"There, there, pet don't worry," her father comforted her. "I'll help you out. Two can play this game. I'll get you a new sweater for nothing. Now hurry up and get breakfast for a starving man."

"Don't Jody! Don't! Over here behind the old elm," whispered a voice to Jody as she was coming down the path after swimming. "Who is it?" she demanded.

"It's me, Pop. Shh! Your mother is looking for me and she wants me to take that swimming George Calvert fishing," answered her father.

"O K Pop but what's up?" Oh! Jody groaned. "Know that, shhh! I don't want to get into any more trouble. Oh Pop what can I do?"

For her answer Jody grinned.

'ORATE FRATES' OBSERVED AT CAMP As Boys Learn Liturgy of Mass

Putting their seminary training to practical use the confreres at Camp Stella Maris are teaching the boys campers to offer the Sacrifice of the Mass with the priest.

English Missals have been obtained by the Camp for the use of the campers. The various prayers are marked and the boys say the Mass prayers in union with the priest offering the Mass. Thus the campers learn to say the Mass and they evaluate a deeper appreciation of the Mass by their accompanying the priest in his prayers.

Mass is celebrated daily at the chapel and many of the campers attend nearly every morning. The Mass at the camp is a beautiful story, of course. Optional instructions on the Sacrifice of the Mass and morning of the vestments, prayers and ceremonies of the Holy Mass.

Here are eight poems for you to try as a test of your knowledge. 1. Who discovered electricity with the aid of a kite? 2. What is the attitude of the equator? 3. Who was the supreme Roman god?

Mr. Pinchout—"Bad about Mrs. B. died this morning while trying to do a new dress."

"Don't bother Mr. Lindstrom I have said Mr. Calvert as the telephone rang. It was that evening 'Hello! Oh, Jody where are you, dear? You know Lane sent us a telegram saying he wouldn't be here. It must have missed you. Where did you go today?"

"Oh, Jody where are you?" Then he listened patiently at the whole story came tumbling out. She concluded with "and everything went along just as we had planned, the broadcast, the mucky road and everything except I drew the wrong name. By the way, his name is Lance Sheridan, a great-grandson of General Phil Sheridan."

Her voice was silent for a moment, but she came back with a smile. "I'm sure you would like to know how things are looking up at this end."

"Things certainly are, Pop," came a manly voice over the wire. "Jody!" exclaimed Mr. Lindstrom as he listened to another be turned to his wife and said, "Prepare yourself for the role of a mother-in-law."
