CATHOLIC DAILY

Edition Envisioned In Chicago Area

CHICAGO (N. C.) — An announcement in The New World, official publication of the Archdiocese of Chicago, says "remote preparations" are under way which will make it possible for that paper "to issue several editions a week or become a daily when and if conditions warrant such a step."

The announcement, made in a front-page article, reviews some points that have been made in past discussions of the establishment of a Catholic daily newspaper, and declares that The New World "is seriously taking steps to build up" its editorial staff, sales organization and advertising department. During the past year it has added to its staff four recent graduates of Catholic schools with some training in journalism, the paper adds.

To Train A Staff

With its present staff, the article says, The New World "is in a position to give some attention to the practical training of graduates of Catholic colleges who are interested in journalism." It is hoped, the article adds, "that a mutually advantageous agreement can be worked out so that graduates of local schools of journalism can continue their training in a practical manner." Positions on The New World staff, in which the graduates could "earn while they learn," would be given in the nature of scholarships to outstanding graduates of schools of journalism it is said.

The New World, it is stated is making plans to add a page or two devoted to social events, weddings, parties, club activities and other pursuits.

According to the tentative plans now under consideration the regular weekly edition of The New World will remain unchanged and would be similar to the Sunday edition of a daily newspaper, the article says.

"It is hoped that the daily edition will make its appearance late in 1939 or early in 1940," it is stated.

A suggestion has been entertained, the article continues, that the operation if not the scual title, of the building now housing the paper's offices be taken over by the New World Publishing Company. The building, located in the heart of the Loop district, is owned by the Archdiocese of Chicago.

"These plans are being announced well in advance of the actual launching of a daily edition of The New World," it is stated, because the management is anxious to have an expression of opinon on the part of readers and friends.

MSGR. READY FLAYS COLORING OF NEWS

Cites Story on Card. Innitzer

WASHINGTON — "A trend in present-day journalism to color news that it may assume sensational character," was deplored by the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Michael J. Ready, General Secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, here today.

Charging that news from Germany and Austria, as well as from Spain, is being colored to serve the ends of political partiality, Monsignor Ready directed attention to a recent dispatch from Europe concerning His Eminence Theodore Cardinal Innitzer, Archbishop of Vienna.

"This story devoted its first paragraphs to the elaboration of a report which at best was only conjecture, to the effect that Theodore Cardinal Innitzer of Austria is heading a faction of Nazi sympathizers whihh stands in opposition to another faction, anti-Nazi in character, headed by Cardinal Faulhaber of Germany," Monsignor Ready declared.

"On this doubtful premise the conclusion is reached and set forth in a headline, that the Catholic Church in the present Reich is threatened with schism.

False Impression Given

"Thousands of readers throughout this country glancing at two or three paragraphs of this story will immediately get the idea that Cardinal Innitzer is on the verge of creating a schism within the Church because of his own personal opinions on a political situation affecting his native land.

"Such readers will never see the ninth paragraph of this story which contains a news angle of such importance that it should have been displayed in the lead. This is Cardinal Innitzer's own statement on the matter as follows:

"'Innitzer, however, denied he is the leader of any movement to break with the Pope.'

"'These reports are plain lies against which I energetically protest,' he said.'

"Even if most Catholics and especially those of the United States should disagree with Cardinal Innitzer's ideas on Nazism, does not warrant the correspondents of news agencies which serve American papers in coloring their stories in such a way that Cardinal Innitzer's denial of any intention of launching a schism is buried so deeply in body of the story as to conceal it effectively from those who read their papers. American fashions and are content to get the gist of the news from the opening paragraphs.

Loyalty Never Questioned

"During his long career Cardinal Innitzer's loyalty to the Church has never been questioned. It is eminently unfair to seize upon a report which is not substantiated, thus giving rise to the belief that this prelate plans a schism when in no uncertain words he has branded this report as 'plain lies against which I energetically protest.'

"It is to be lamented that there is a trend in present day journalism to color news that it may assume a sensational character. There is an old story about the news value of a dog biting a man. It may be assumed that it is not news when a Cardinal of the Catholic Church proclaims his loyalty to that Church. However, this is no reason why a correspondent, seeking to give a sensational twist to a story, should conceal the one statement in it which, if given prominence in the first paragraph, would have given it the element of truth even though it took away some of its so-called 'news value.'"

Rotary Defined In Peruvian Pastoral

LIMA—(NC)—The Episcopate of Peru, in a pastoral on Rotary, defines the position of Catholics, stating that while priests are forbidden by the Holy See to become members, no absolute prohibition can be placed upon the laity.

Some of the principles of Rotarianism are laudable, says the pastoral, but Catholics should not content themselves with mere philanthropy, but rather enroll themselves in societies organized by Catholic Action. Those who are Rotary members, say the Bishops, should see that their club takes no measures contrary to their religion.

PROTESTANT AVERS CHURCH 'MENACE'

Scare In Canada Is Foolish

MONTREAL — (NCWC) — The "menace" of the Catholic Church as feared by a minister speaking at the Canadian Institute of Economics and Politics is ridiculed and the Church praised by Ashley W. Cooper, Protestant columnist of the Montreal "Gazette."

The minister is quoted as saying that Cardinal Villeneuve wrote the Quebec Padlock Law, that Catholics are growing more intolerant, and that in Quebec the Church is "going too heavily into the tax-exempt real estate business."

"This Toronto reverend," says the columnist, "makes it sound as though the Pope is quite a problem for Protestant Canada. If the Pope was, wouldn't His Holiness be a super-mamsie problem for Protestant Quebec? And if that were so, why didn't some Protestant minister from Catholic Quebec go up to Ontario to wag the warning finger?

Flop in Quebec

"The thrilling yarn this Toronto reverend spun at the lakeside will probably flop far many of us in Quebec. It may all be true. Yet if the disquited gentleman would pack the ministerial toothbrush and pajamis and come down to live here awhile, he might be disagreeably astounded to find how many Quebec Protestants don't remember they're living in a Catholic land - unless someone shouts. In Quebec we Protestants are outright Protestant. We're proud of it. We don't want to be Catholics. We won't. From the way they leave us in peace, it looks as though the Catholics aren't fussy about having us, either.

"Through generations, anti-Catholic alarms have sounded in Quebec. Yet how many red-faced, cherry old lads and lassies of seventy and up were born Protestant in Quebec, will die Protestant, and they're altogether too rotund to have been crushed by a Catholic Church.

Tranquility Reigns

"You don't have to be three score and anything, moreover, to admit that in bygone days, when the hand of the Roman Catholic Church lay heavier on the French Canadians than it does today, Quebec was the finest place for real living. That's why we English Protestants stayed. Tranquility, live-and-let-live grace a rounded and alluring culture. Truly could Gadsby write in the Montreal 'Standard': 'The French-Canadian is at peace with this world and the next.'

"Quebec is still the finer place to live. We English Protestants still stay. We fail to perceive any crushing by the Roman Catholic Church. When anything looms that we don't like, we Protestants lean on the Church! How can we strut the air of the martyr when the Protestant son of an Ontario Protestant minister writes editorially in the Protestant Montreal 'Star': 'Revolution! . . . the stalwart and sturdy Catholic Church would smother it in Quebec.'

"The Roman Catholics! If they have any outstanding miseries, I vow it isn't gobbling the Protestants alive rather what's to be done with a Catholic flock of increasing worldliness. The Protestant who says out loud that he doesn't believe in the Pope is less dangerous than the Roman Catholic who goes to Mass on the Seventh Day 'pour la forme.'"

Preserve Catholic Heritage Parents Told In Letter

Dangers To Faith of Young From Open and Subtle Attacks Cited in Instructions; To Show Need for High-school Religious Classes

Declaring that "a class-room atmosphere, which is not religious, is extremely dangerous," His Excellency, the Most Rev. James E. Kearney, D.D., Bishop of Rochester has issued a letter to parents of the children in public schools appealing to them to comply with their pastors' plans and to discharge their duties in regard to their children's religious instruction. The letter follows:

TO THE PARENTS OF CHILDREN IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS:

At the opening of the School Year, I wish to call your attention to the very serious obligation of educating your children in the fear and love of God and in the knowledge and regular practice of their religion. This is a responsibility for which Christ has assured us he will demand a strict accounting. Hence, no parent can afford to neglect or to treat with indifference this matter of the religious education of his child. From the beginning of the school term now, see that your children go to instructions. Take pains to investigate personally whether they prepare their lessons. See to it that they attend the Sacraments regularly and that they are present and in time for Mass.

The Catholic faith of your boys and girls is their most precious heritage, purchased at the price of the blood of our Saviour. Say what you will, the faith of the young is today the object of both open and subtle attacks. A class-room atmosphere, which is not religious, is extremely dangerous. The class-room which ignores God and religion is particularly unwholesome for young minds. But this is not all. Very often teachers without faith give the impression, perhaps unwittingly, that there is a conflict between religion and science, that history does not bear witness to the truth of the Catholic Church, and therefore, an educated man must do violence to his reason to accept the Catholic faith. A well-informed Catholic knows that such statements are utterly false; but what about the young high school girl or boy, whose experience is extremely limited, whose mind is undeveloped and whose judgment is immature?

To safeguard the faith of your boys and girls, ignorance must be met with knowledge, error with truth, and irreligion with the gospel of Christ. This is one purpose of our high-school-religion classes. But it should not be our only purpose. We should strive for something more positive, namely, to help the young grow in the knowledge and love of God.

The high school student should have a deeper knowledge of the Creed, of the Commandments, and of the Sacraments than when he studied the elementary catechism. If the religious knowledge and practice of the Catholic youth do not keep pace with his secular knowledge and development, you will find a miserable illiterate and out of balance man he has been trained to be.

In order to provide an hour for the ministrations of religious knowledge and practice necessary for the development of Christian men and women, I am instructing the Reverend Pastors to see that weekly religious instruction is given regularly to the boys and girls of their respective parishes attending public high schools. This program, of course, needs the cooperation of the parents and of such students. The instruction will avail little if inconstancy or irregular attendance on the part of the students destroys the value of the lessons given. But we dare not neglect the souls of our young people because some will abuse a privilege granted. Therefore, I earnestly appeal to your faith and charity as Catholic parents to comply with the plans of your pastor and in charge conscientiously. The sacred duty in having your children attend regularly their religious instructions provided for them.

Your devotedly interested in Christ,

+ James E. Kearney

ANECDOTE RECALLS To Priest Kindness Of Cardinal Hayes

NEW YORK—(NC)—An anecdote illustrating the kindness of His Eminence the late Patrick Cardinal Hayes is contained in a letter of condolence to the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Robert F. Keegan, Secretary to His Eminence by Charles, from the Rev. William Keane, Director of Catholic Charities in Albany.

"For a year he was my Ordinary as a Chaplain in the Army," writes Father Keane. "The circumstances of one meeting which epitomizes his kindliness will never be forgotten.

"Clad in a dirty uniform, without a clerical collar to my name, I landed in New York on the day that he was installed as Archbishop of your diocese. The late Monsignor Dunn met me in the hotel lobby, learning that I had just returned from France, he insisted that I should go to see the new Archbishop. I told him that I would not think of troubling him on such an arduous day. Monsignor insisted that I should go directly to the Archbishop's house.

"I did so. To my surprise, I was conducted upstairs to the Archbishop's study and received with a kindness and affection that cannot be described by mere words. I was invited to be his guest at an 'Army Chaplains' dinner the following day. When I told him that I had to report to Camp Dix for discharge within 24 hours, he called his secretary and made the necessary arrangements for a 12-hour extension so that I might be present at the dinner. To some, this might seem like a little thing, but to me it meant that I had been in the presence of a great man, who could take time on a busy day to show extraordinary courtesy to a young priest who had served under him."

Parish Pupils Get Buses

NEW YORK — Transportation for physically handicapped children to Catholic parish schools has been directed here by Mayor La Guardia, despite the ruling of the Court of Appeals against the use of city funds for that purpose.

The Mayor has directed the Welfare Department to use part of a $300,000 appropriation voted for that purpose by the Board of Estimate.

After calling a special meeting of the board members in his office at City Hall, the Mayor made clear that the appropriation would be used to transport crippled children to both public and parochial schools. The board has made previous appropriations for the purpose since the Court of Appeals decision.

"I have directed the Commissioner of Welfare to assume responsibility for the transportation of school children," he told the board, "and I have directed him to avail himself of any agency and the city government or its personnel to aid and assist him in this new function now placed in the Department of Welfare."

The Board of Education had previously supervised school bus transportation, and the function was transferred to the Welfare Department after the Court of Appeals made its decision.

When Borough President Stanley M. Isaacs of Manhattan said he would like further information before voting, the Mayor said bus transportation for crippled children was essentially a function of the Welfare Department. He explained that this department was permitted to provide appliances and artificial limbs for handicapped children so that they could attend school. He added that there was little difference between this kind of aid and transportation.

Mr. Isaacs joined the other board members in an affirmative vote, but remarked that he would study the matter before voting on a similar appropriation in future.
