Smocks for Mothers Wrong
By Msgr. P. M. H. Wymhoven
Editor-in-Chief
Catholic Action of the South

What is wrong with the world today? Mothers no longer wear aprons but smocks in attending to their household duties. Smocks have no strings; hence we find children no longer tied to their proverbial pappadages. Thus we are raising a generation of disrespectful, inconsiderate, pampered youngsters who are bound to prove a source of sorrow to their parents, a discredit to the community, destroyers of happiness for themselves and others. Children today no longer care or bother about what father and mother have to say or want.

We stand aghast in reading of the rites of the old, idolatrous Phoenicians who worshipped a hollow bronze statue of Moloch filled with fire into which children were thrown as a sacrifice. Our minds can hardly conceive the unnatural cruelty of these parents. Still this form of idolatry is mild compared with the idolatry of our modern parents. "Neither become ye idolaters," the Apostle warns; and we proceed to think immediately of the poor benighted heathen in pagan lands and the golden-calf worshippers of old. Why make this far-stretching mental effort? Let us stay the home with our thoughts on the subject and study the pitiful spectacle we present, we the enlightened citizenry of modern civilization.

How do we raise our children? We have made veritable idols of them. They must be worshipped, pleased and gratified at all times and at any price. Every law is suspended if it interferes with their whims and notions. God's laws are ignored in their service; parents are ridiculed and scornfully neglected, and these precious young hopes of the future are often applauded and considered cute and clever when they break civil rules and ordinances without getting caught by the police.

This juvenile disregard of law and order is not a little increased today by the subversive, communistic influence spread clandestinely in this country through vicious foreign literature. Recently the attention of school authorities in Oklahoma City was attracted after several pupils refused to attend classes regularly or submit to school discipline. Investigation showed that the members of this student organization repudiated the authority of parents, school superiors and denied the right of all law. The officers were known as "commissioners," a term associated with Russian Communism. The young president of the organization explained that while the members favored entire religious freedom, many of them were avowed atheists.

Anyone too interested in Communism, or approving it, is bound to be an atheist, for the laws of God and the rules of Communism are diametrically opposed to each other. God has established an order and has given a code of discipline which man must follow. It is the rule of religion to do away with this supreme law to destroy eternal authority, which means the abandonment of the belief in God's existence.

The eternal arrangement is has been, and always will be that parents are the principal agents in God's designs to train children to be submissive to law and order calculated to be the foundation of their future happiness and that of the world at large. All children are innately rebellious to discipline. It is the parents' duty wisely to make them mind at all and any cost. It is a distinct piece of tragic cowardice for the father to say, "Oh, let mother correct the children," and for mother to argue, "The children next door are allowed to do such and such, why can't let mine go ahead and do the same?"

By sacrificing the God-given fundamental training rules to the pleasure and indulgence of children is a worse type of idolatry, a greater sin than to throw them alive into a white-hot burning furnace. The latter crime only destroys their body; the other form will damn their souls to hell for eternity. Yet how many parents today are guilty of this very sin? And when it is too late, when they are beginning to reap the fruits of their foolishness, their sinful indulgence with their children, they pray with tear-filled eyes for God to perform a miracle that will bring back their boy or girl, who has gone wrong. To save this country from ruination we must revert to the days when mothers wore apron strings and father kept an impressive little bamboo cane in a certain corner.

Saga Of Savages — Priest's Topic

REV. W. A. ROSS, S.V.D., before and after 12 years in New Guinea.

After twelve years among savages of New Guinea who are still living at the cultural level of the stone-age, Father William A. Ross, of Divine Word Mission, is returning to the United States for the Eleventh National Convention of the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade at the Catholic University of America, August 22-25.

The people in the Mount Hagen region of New Guinea still use stone implements, but have become accustomed to the sight of airplanes flying up from the coast. Although a missionary brother was killed by the tribesmen less than five years ago, the natives, in response to appeals of Father Ross, staged a disarmament ceremony recently, in which they burned spears and shields as a sign that they would never again wage war with neighboring tribes.

Society for Propagation of the Faith

The REV. JOHN S. RANDALL, Director
50 Home — Foreign Stone
Chestnut St. Catholic Missions 4013

MISSION INTENTION: "That the cause of peace and harmony among peoples may be promoted through the agency of Christian charity."

When Christ was born, forty-two years after Augustus Caesar had assumed command of the Roman Empire, the whole world, we are told, was at peace. For the first time in many years the doors of the temple of Janus were closed and there was no country or people in arms against the acknowledged mistress of the world. But this Pax Romana was peace, not of justice, but of force. It was built upon strength of arms rather than upon the lasting and solid foundation of justice and charity.

It was not, therefore, a true peace whose advent awaited the coming of a tiny Babe, the arrival of Whom was announced by angelic messengers in an exultant chorus of "peace on earth to men of good will." The thirty-three years of life spent by that Babe on earth were striking examples of the real quality of peace and harmony, obtained through the agency of charity, "not in an exemption from suffering." His promise to His Apostles the night before He died was the eternal bestowing of that same gift. He said: "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, do I give unto you." Finally, this legacy of the Risen and Glorified Saviour became the distinguishing mark of His followers throughout the centuries.

Today, enmity and strife hinder the progress of mission work. Our good priests and sisters who have devoted themselves to the salvation of all mankind, are endangered. First, then, that they might be spared at least these hardships and that the Prince of Peace may reign supreme throughout the world.

The Saintly Dominic

It was in old Castile that the glorious St. Dominic, founder of the Order of Preachers, was born in 1170. To friends of the mission cause, this great Saint and the order he founded are well known and deeply revered.

The great characteristic of St. Dominic's life seems to have been similar to that of his Divine Master, a thirst for souls, which might be added his great devotion to the Queen of Heaven. Heresy was striking at the very roots of Catholicism during the 12th and 13th centuries and the heart of this great priest from Castile was saddened by the sight of thousands of souls being led into error by the false teachings of the heretical leaders of the times. Truly a man of action, St. Dominic led the attacks upon the Albigenses, and the influence of his preaching coupled with the eminent holiness of his life, won many back to the True Faith.

Yet, Dominic was first and foremost a foreign missionary. To his spiritual sons and daughters he expressed the wish that they should "go to the pagans to enlighten them with the light of the Gospel and to bring them to the knowledge of the true God." How well his commission was carried out may be understood from a brief perusal of the history of the Catholic Church during the past seven centuries.

St. Dominic built well the structure of his great missionary order and countless millions have learned to rejoice in the results of his zeal. The Orient, the Near East, Africa, and North and South America have listened to the doctrines of Christianity preached by followers of this great leader. The first native Chinese priest, who became the first native Chinese Bishop, was a Dominican. Dominican priests, nuns and tertiary in the thousands have shed their blood for the Faith. Dominicans today are carrying on the same work in far-flung mission fields. Let us have recourse, then, to this saint and tertiary in the thousands who have shed their blood for the Faith. Dominicans today are carrying on the same work in far-flung mission fields. Let us have recourse, then, to this saint and tertiary in the thousands who have shed their blood for the Faith.

What is a Mela?

Perhaps some of our world cruise readers may be able to answer that question but for the benefit of the less fortunate let us refer to Father E. J. O'Leary, S. J., who is at work in Patna, India. He informs us that "a mela is a combination fair and religious ceremony. Naturally there must be a number of shops selling rice, and other foodstuffs, but cloth merchants, and all other type of shop keepers find it worth while to come. Everything is for sale on these occasions. One sector at nearly every mela is reserved for the cattle: cows, bullocks, horses and in some places, camels and elephants."

One of the big parts of a mela is the ceremonial bath, which accounts for the throngs which gather near our missions. Certain spots in the holy Ganges are more sacred than others and in November a special mela for our mission is considered the most efficacious since holiness just flows from that point on the day in question. After bathing, the pilgrims wash their clothes in the sacred river and some pick up a supply of water for the day or to carry home with them.

Perhaps this short description will give some idea of the difficulty which a scholar who is in their work in India, as well as the deep hold Hinduism has upon the minds of the people. Would you be interested in helping to win the souls of 400 million souls to Christ? If so, say the daily prayer: "Our Father," "Hail Mary" and "St. Francis Xavier, pray for us" and make the necessary offering for Ordinary Membership in the Society for the Propagation of the Faith. It is these offerings which enable Catholic missionaries throughout the world to carry on their great work of evangelization.

Priest Initiates Slum Clearance

DUBLIN. The Rev. Richard J. Dalton, of Cork, is the author of an unusual building project for the benefit of slum families in that city.

The members of his Marsh Building Society, Ltd., have agreed with the Government not to accept profit from the plan. At the opening ceremony in connection with the first eight houses erected under the plan in the presence of S. T. O'Kelly, Minister for Local Government, Father Dalton told the story of the Society.

Two years ago, he said, it was formed for the purpose of collecting funds to build houses for those who were too poor to buy more than a moderate rent. The charity of Christ was the only obligation on the Society to undertake the work, he declared. Any profits that might in time accrue from the rents or other sources would go into the fund for the maintenance of the existing houses and toward the extension of the plan.

Generous subscriptions and donations were received from several citizens all insisting on remaining anonymous. The total cost of the eight houses approximated $20,000. A sum of $750 per house was contributed by the Government and Cork Municipal Council. The Society, Father Dalton declared, is absolutely solvent.

In paying tribute to the promoter, Mr. O'Kelly said the Cork project provides a striking example of public-minded and public-spirited citizenship.
